(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

DEFINITIONS

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE SECRETARY'S PLAN

SEC. 104. (a) Section 401(a)(3) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(a)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) The Secretary is authorized and directed to implement the Secretary's Plan, in accordance with paragraph (4) of this subsection. Such implementation of the Secretary's Plan and the coordinated operation of the Corporation's properties with those of Norfolk Southern Corporation and its affiliates as a single rail system is deemed approved by the Commission under chapter 113 of title 49, United States Code.".

(b) Section 401(a) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(4) The Secretary shall implement the Secretary's Plan by negotiating, executing, delivering, and performing the Definitive Agreements, which shall conform to the Memorandum of Intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act. The Secretary shall, 45 calendar days before the date on which the Secretary anticipates that the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation will be sold to Norfolk Southern Corporation, transmit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a notification of any alteration from the Memorandum of Intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act which will be made in the Definitive Agreements. After the date of such sale, the Secretary shall transmit to such Committees notification of any intent to waive compliance with any substantive covenant, agreement or obligation contained in the Definitive Agreements, and the Secretary may not waive such compliance until a period of 45 calendar days has expired after the date of such transmittal.

"(5) The Secretary shall not transfer the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation except concurrently with a divestiture by Norfolk Southern Corporation of rail assets and rights approved by the Attorney General.

"(6) The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation shall be deemed to be consummated at the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.".

RAILROAD PURCHASERS AND OFFER FOR SALE OF SHARES TO EMPLOYEES

SEC. 105. Subsections (d) and (e) of section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761 (d) and (e)) are repealed.

CANCELLATION OF DEBT AND PREFERRED STOCK

SEC. 106. Section 402 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 762) is amended to read as follows:

"DEBT AND PREFERRED STOCK

"SEC. 402. (a) RECAPITALIZATION.—In connection with the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation under section 401 of this Act, and consistent with the Secretary's Plan, the Secretary may take all action necessary to cause the Corporation to be recapitalized such that the interest of the United States, or any agent or instrumentality thereof, and all other commitments or obligations of the Corporation to the United States or any agent or instrumentality thereof arising out of such interest, in any debt (including accrued interest and contingent interest thereon) and preferred stock (including accrued and unpaid dividends thereon) of the Corporation shall be cancelled or retired, and contributed to the capital of the Corporation. The Secretary shall cause the recapitalization authorized by this section to be effective as of the consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation.

"(b) BREACH OF REPRESENTATIONS.—(1) Norfolk Southern Corporation or any successor corporation thereto may bring suit for any breach of representations contained in paragraph 6(e) of the Memorandum of Intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act (hereinafter referred to as the 'Representations') in the United States Claims Court or a district court of the United States. If such an action is brought, the Claims Court or district court shall determine the amount by which the United States income tax (including interest and penalties whether or not such penalties are assessed as a tax under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) assessable against the Corporation or against Norfolk Southern Corporation for any year exceeds the amount of such tax which would have been assessable for such year had such Representations not been breached (hereinafter referred to as the 'Offset Amount').

"(2) The Representations shall be considered breached and Norfolk Southern Corporation shall be entitled to bring suit upon the first occurrence of any of the following that is inconsistent with the Representations: (A) the issuance by the Internal Revenue Service of a statutory notice of deficiency (90-day letter), (B) the assessment of the United States income tax, or (C) any claim by the United States in a suit or other judicial proceeding against Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation.

"(3) The right to bring suit pursuant to this section shall not be subject to any waiting period applicable to tax proceedings or to any requirements for payment of any tax as a condition to instituting any suit based on a breach of the Representations.

"(4) Any judgment for money damages relating to breach of the Representations shall only be awarded as an offset in any court or administrative proceeding against the tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation, or both, to which such breach relates; except that if any such tax liability resulting from such breach has been paid, the judgment shall to that extent be an offset against any United States income tax liability of the Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation, or both. If any portion of the tax resulting from a breach of the Representations has been paid, then the Offset Amount shall include interest on such payment from the date paid at the rate from time to time specified in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for interest payable on refund claims.

"(5) It shall not be a defense to an action brought under this section that Norfolk Southern Corporation knew, or should have known, of the falsity of the Representations or that there exists no carryover basis procedure as contemplated by the last sentence of the Representations.

"(6) For purposes of this section, tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation shall include the tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation and its affiliated group, within the meaning of section 1504 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.".

SEC. 109. Section 703 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 797b) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c); and

(2) by inserting immediately after subsection (a) the following subsection:

"(b) IMPLEMENTATION OF SECRETARY'S PLAN.—Any employee of any railroad who is deprived of employment as a result of the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall have the first right of hire for a vacancy for which he is qualified on any Norfolk Southern Corporation rail subsidiary, except where such vacancy is covered by (1) an affirmative action plan, or a hiring plan designated to eliminate discrimination, that is required by Federal or State statute, regulation, or Executive order, or by the order of a Federal court or agency, or (2) a permissible voluntary affirmative action plan. For purposes of this subsection, a railroad shall not be considered to be hiring new employees when it recalls any of its own furloughed employees.".

CROSS CRAFT EMPLOYMENT

SEC. 110. (a) Title VII of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 797 et seq.) is amended by inserting immediately after section 703 the following section:

"CROSS CRAFT EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 703A. Any employee of Norfolk and Western Railway Company, Southern Railway Company, or the Corporation who is deprived of employment as a result of the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall have the first right of hire for any vacancy for which such employee is qualified at the entry level of any Norfolk Southern Corporation rail subsidiary, without regard to craft or class or the provisions of section 703 of this Act. Such employee shall retain his seniority rights to return to his original craft or class whenever a vacancy occurs. For purposes of this section, a railroad shall not be considered to be hiring new employees when it recalls any of its own furloughed employees.".

(b) The table of contents of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 is amended by inserting immediately after the item relating to section 703 the following item:

"Sec. 703A. Cross craft employment.".

Subtitle B—Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 Amendments

SPECIAL COURT JURISDICTION

SEC. 121. (a) Section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or the Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985" immediately after "subtitle" wherever it appears;

(2) in subsection (a), by striking "or" at the end of paragraph (3), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(5) brought by the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof seeking to enforce the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements;

"(6) brought by Norfolk Southern Corporation seeking to enforce the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements;

"(7) brought by a party who filed a complaint with the Secretary under subsection (e) of this section, and who is aggrieved by (A) a determination of the Secretary under paragraph (1) of such subsection that the party has not suffered direct economic injury, or (B) a decision of the Secretary under paragraph (2) of such subsection that a covenant has not been violated;

"(8) brought by a party which is a signatory to an ancillary agreement entered into in accordance with the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements and which is seeking to enforce such ancillary agreement; or

"(9) brought to determine the value of the interest of the employee stock ownership plan and related trusts, or of the beneficiaries thereof, in the preferred stock of the Conrail Equity Corporation.

For purposes of any action brought under paragraph (5) of this subsection, a violation of any covenant contained in the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements shall be deemed to constitute immediate and irreparable harm for purposes of awarding injunctive relief to the United States.".

(b) Section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(e)(1) Any party who suffers direct economic injury as a result of an alleged violation of a covenant contained in the Definitive Agreements may file a complaint with the Secretary seeking enforcement of such covenant. If the Secretary determines that the complainant has demonstrated to the Secretary that it has suffered direct economic injury, the Secretary shall investigate the complaint.

"(2) If the Secretary decides to investigate a complaint under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Secretary shall give reasonable notice of such decision to investigate to the alleged violator of such covenant and the complainant, and shall make a final decision on such complaint within 60 days after the date on which it was filed.

"(3) If the Secretary finds that (A) the covenant in question has been violated, and (B) the complainant suffered direct economic injury as a result of such violation, the Secretary shall enter an order directing the violator of such covenant to comply with such covenant.

"(4) On appeal, any decision by the Secretary under this subsection shall be upheld, unless such decision is found to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.".

APPLICABILITY OF OTHER LAWS

SEC. 122. Section 1168(a) of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1116(a)) is amended by striking "service transfers" and inserting in lieu thereof "sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail or transfer of the rail properties and freight service responsibilities of Conrail".

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

SEC. 304. The Secretary shall, no later than January 31 of each year, submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report setting forth each certificate which Norfolk Southern Corporation and Conrail provided to the Secretary, during the preceding year, certifying compliance with the covenants contained in the Definitive Agreements.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 305. If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 306. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the provisions of and amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) Sections 108(a), 201 and 202 of this Act shall take effect on the date of consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

(c) Any provision of this Act which, pursuant to Article I, Section 7 of the Constitution, provides for raising revenue shall only be effective upon the enactment into law of a bill which has originated in the House of Representatives enacting such provision.

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock.

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 4. (a) In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term—

(1) "Conrail" means the Consolidated Rail Corporation;

(2) "Definitive Agreements" means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (4)(A);

(3) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation; and

(4) "Secretary's Plan" means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E.

(b) Section 102 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 702) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (6) through (18) as paragraphs (7) through (19), and paragraphs (19) through (21) as paragraphs (21) through (23), respectively;

(2) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following paragraph:

"(6) 'Definitive Agreements' means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (20)(A);"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (19), as so redesignated, the following paragraph:

"(20) 'Secretary's Plan' means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E;".

(c) Section 1135(a) of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1104(a)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (6), (7), and (8) as paragraphs (7), (8), and (10), respectively;

(2) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following paragraph:

"(6) 'Definitive Agreements' means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (9)(A);"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (8), as so redesignated, the following paragraph:

"(9) 'Secretary's Plan' means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E;".

"(17) section 710(b)(1) of this Act;

"(18) section 711 of this Act;

"(19) section 714 of this Act, but only with regard to disputes or controversies specified in such section that arose prior to consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation; and

"(20) section 715 of this Act, as amended by the Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985.".

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE SECRETARY'S PLAN

SEC. 104. (a) Section 401(a)(3) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(a)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) The Secretary is authorized and directed to implement the Secretary's Plan, in accordance with paragraph (4) of this subsection. Such implementation of the Secretary's Plan and the coordinated operation of the Corporation's properties with those of Norfolk Southern Corporation and its affiliates as a single rail system is deemed approved by the Commission under chapter 113 of title 49, United States Code.".

(b) Section 401(a) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(4) The Secretary shall implement the Secretary's Plan by negotiating, executing, delivering, and performing the Definitive Agreements, which shall conform to the Memorandum of Intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act. The Secretary shall, 45 calendar days before the date on which the Secretary anticipates that the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation will be sold to Norfolk Southern Corporation, transmit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a notification of any alteration from the Memorandum of Intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act which will be made in the Definitive Agreements. After the date of such sale, the Secretary shall transmit to such Committees notification of any intent to waive compliance with any substantive covenant, agreement or obligation contained in the Definitive Agreements, and the Secretary may not waive such compliance until a period of 45 calendar days has expired after the date of such transmittal.

"(5) The Secretary shall not transfer the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation except concurrently with a divestiture by Norfolk Southern Corporation of rail assets and rights approved by the Attorney General.

"(6) The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation shall be deemed to be consummated at the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.".

RAILROAD PURCHASERS AND OFFER FOR SALE OF SHARES TO EMPLOYEES

SEC. 105. Subsections (d) and (e) of section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(d) and (e)) are repealed.

CANCELLATION OF DEBT AND PREFERRED STOCK

SEC. 106. Section 402 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 762) is amended to read as follows:

"DEBT AND PREFERRED STOCK

"SEC. 402. (a) RECAPITALIZATION.—In connection with the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation under section 401 of this Act, and consistent with the Secretary's Plan, the Secretary may take all action necessary to cause the Corporation to be recapitalized such that the interest of the United States, or any agent or instrumentality thereof, and all other commitments or obligations of the Corporation to the United States or any agent or instrumentality thereof arising out of such interest, in any debt (including accrued interest and contingent interest thereon) and preferred stock (including accrued and unpaid dividends thereon) of the Corporation shall be cancelled or retired, and contributed to the capital of the Corporation. The Secretary shall cause the recapitalization authorized by this section to be effective as of the consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation.

"(b) BREACH OF REPRESENTATIONS.—(1) Norfolk Southern Corporation or any successor corporation thereto may bring suit for any breach of representations contained in paragraph 6(e) of the Memorandum of Intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act (hereinafter referred to as the 'Representations') in the United States Claims Court or a district court of the United States. If such an action is brought, the Claims Court or district court shall determine the amount by which the United States income tax (including interest and penalties whether or not such penalties are assessed as a tax under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) assessable against the Corporation or against Norfolk Southern Corporation for any year exceeds the amount of such tax which would have been assessable for such year had such Representations not been breached (hereinafter referred to as the 'Offset Amount').

"(2) The Representations shall be considered breached and Norfolk Southern Corporation shall be entitled to bring suit upon the first occurrence of any of the following that is inconsistent with the Representations: (A) the issuance by the Internal Revenue Service of a statutory notice of deficiency (90-day letter), (B) the assessment of the United States income tax, or (C) any claim by the United States in a suit or other judicial proceeding against Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation.

"(3) The right to bring suit pursuant to this section shall not be subject to any waiting period applicable to tax proceedings or to any requirements for payment of any tax as a condition to instituting any suit based on a breach of the Representations.

"(4) Any judgment for money damages relating to breach of the Representations shall only be awarded as an offset in any court or administrative proceeding against the tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation, or both, to which such breach relates; except that if any such tax liability resulting from such breach has been paid, the judgment shall to that extent be an offset against any United States income tax liability of the Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation, or both. If any portion of the tax resulting from a breach of the Representations has been paid, then the Offset Amount shall include interest on such payment from the date paid at the rate from time to time specified in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for interest payable on refund claims.

"(5) It shall not be a defense to an action brought under this section that Norfolk Southern Corporation knew, or should have known, of the falsity of the Representations or that there exists no carryover basis procedure as contemplated by the last sentence of the Representations.

"(6) For purposes of this section, tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation shall include the tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation and its affiliated group, within the meaning of section 1504 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.".

APPLICABILITY OF CERTAIN LAWS TO SALE OF CONRAIL

SEC. 107. Section 408 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 768) is amended—

(1) by repealing subsection (b);

(2) by amending subsection (c) by striking "No transfer" and all that follows through "subject to" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105), the Secretary's Plan and the Definitive Agreements and their negotiation, execution, and implementation shall not be subject to administrative or"; and

(3) by adding at the end of subsection (c) the following sentence: "The issuance in private placement of notes or other securities in accordance with exhibit B to the Memorandum of Intent (described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act) in the Secretary's Plan shall not be subject to the provisions of subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code.".

LABOR PROTECTION

SEC. 108. (a) Section 701(d)(2) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 797(d)(2)) is amended by striking "the last day of the eighteen-month period beginning on".

"PROTECTION AFTER SALE

"SEC. 715. After consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation pursuant to the Secretary's Plan, any employee of Norfolk Southern Corporation, the Corporation, any rail affiliate of either company, and any transferee of the rail tracks, rights, and facilities divested in accordance with the Secretary's Plan, who is adversely affected in his employment by the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall receive from his employer protection under the labor protective conditions set forth in New York Dock Railway—Control—Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal (354 ICC 399 (1978), modified upon further consideration, 360 ICC 60 (1979)). The arbitration provisions of section 4 of New York Dock shall apply to the formation of any implementing agreements that may be necessary in connection with the implementation of the Secretary's Plan, including any resulting coordinations.".

(2) The table of contents of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 is amended by inserting immediately after the item relating to section 714 the following item:

"Sec. 715. Protection after sale.".

PREFERENTIAL HIRING

SEC. 109. Section 703 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 797b) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c); and

(2) by inserting immediately after subsection (a) the following subsection:

"(b) IMPLEMENTATION OF SECRETARY'S PLAN.—Any employee of any railroad who is deprived of employment as a result of the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall have the first right of hire for a vacancy for which he is qualified on any Norfolk Southern Corporation rail subsidiary, except where such vacancy is covered by (1) an affirmative action plan, or a hiring plan designated to eliminate discrimination, that is required by Federal or State statute, regulation, or Executive order, or by the order of a Federal court or agency, or (2) a permissible voluntary affirmative action plan. For purposes of this subsection, a railroad shall not be considered to be hiring new employees when it recalls any of its own furloughed employees.".

CROSS CRAFT EMPLOYMENT

SEC. 110. (a) Title VII of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 797 et seq.) is amended by inserting immediately after section 703 the following section:

"CROSS CRAFT EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 703A. Any employee of Norfolk and Western Railway Company, Southern Railway Company, or the Corporation who is deprived of employment as a result of the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall have the first right of hire for any vacancy for which such employee is qualified at the entry level of any Norfolk Southern Corporation rail subsidiary, without regard to craft or class or the provisions of section 703 of this Act. Such employee shall retain his seniority rights to return to his original craft or class whenever a vacancy occurs. For purposes of this section, a railroad shall not be considered to be hiring new employees when it recalls any of its own furloughed employees.".

"Sec. 703A. Cross craft employment.".

Subtitle B—Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 Amendments

SPECIAL COURT JURISDICTION

SEC. 121. (a) Section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or the Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985" immediately after "subtitle" wherever it appears;

(2) in subsection (a), by striking "or" at the end of paragraph (3), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(5) brought by the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof seeking to enforce the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements;

"(6) brought by Norfolk Southern Corporation seeking to enforce the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements;

"(7) brought by a party who filed a complaint with the Secretary under subsection (e) of this section, and who is aggrieved by (A) a determination of the Secretary under paragraph (1) of such subsection that the party has not suffered direct economic injury, or (B) a decision of the Secretary under paragraph (2) of such subsection that a covenant has not been violated;

"(8) brought by a party which is a signatory to an ancillary agreement entered into in accordance with the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements and which is seeking to enforce such ancillary agreement; or

"(9) brought to determine the value of the interest of the employee stock ownership plan and related trusts, or of the beneficiaries thereof, in the preferred stock of the Conrail Equity Corporation.

For purposes of any action brought under paragraph (5) of this subsection, a violation of any covenant contained in the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements shall be deemed to constitute immediate and irreparable harm for purposes of awarding injunctive relief to the United States.".

(b) Section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(e)(1) Any party who suffers direct economic injury as a result of an alleged violation of a covenant contained in the Definitive Agreements may file a complaint with the Secretary seeking enforcement of such covenant. If the Secretary determines that the complainant has demonstrated to the Secretary that it has suffered direct economic injury, the Secretary shall investigate the complaint.

"(2) If the Secretary decides to investigate a complaint under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Secretary shall give reasonable notice of such decision to investigate to the alleged violator of such covenant and the complainant, and shall make a final decision on such complaint within 60 days after the date on which it was filed.

"(3) If the Secretary finds that (A) the covenant in question has been violated, and (B) the complainant suffered direct economic injury as a result of such violation, the Secretary shall enter an order directing the violator of such covenant to comply with such covenant.

"(4) On appeal, any decision by the Secretary under this subsection shall be upheld, unless such decision is found to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.".

APPLICABILITY OF OTHER LAWS

SEC. 122. Section 1168(a) of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1116(a)) is amended by striking "service transfers" and inserting in lieu thereof "sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail or transfer of the rail properties and freight service responsibilities of Conrail".

Subtitle C—Employee Stock Ownership Plan

RESPONSIBILITY OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLAN FIDUCIARIES

SEC. 131. (a) Section 216(f)(8)(A) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)(8)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of clause (ii);

(2) by striking the period at the end of clause (iii) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following clause:

"(iv) for or in connection with any action taken to implement the Secretary's Plan, including any sale, exchange, valuation, or disposition of the plan and related trust assets, or the assets of Conrail Equity Corporation, in connection with implementation of the Secretary's Plan and any determination of the terms on which any such sale, exchange, valuation, or disposition is effected.".

QUALIFICATION, REVIEW, AND VALUATION OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS

SEC. 132. Section 216(f) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(11) The employee stock ownership plans of the Corporation and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall be deemed to meet the qualification requirements of sections 401 and 501, respectively, of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, notwithstanding (A) that such plans may not meet the requirements of section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or (B) that participants in such plans may be entitled to withdraw a portion of the shares allocated to their accounts prior to the expiration of the period generally imposed by the Internal Revenue Service for qualified plans. Such qualification shall relate only to the contributions, allocations, and withdrawals of shares provided for in the Secretary's Plan with respect to the plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan. Such contributions and allocations shall in no event be treated as having exceeded the maximum annual addition permitted under section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (but not for purposes of applying section 404(j) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) for purposes of calculating any limitation under section 415 with respect to contributions and allocations not described in the Secretary's Plan, including contributions and allocations to plans and related trusts of the Corporation and any affiliated corporation. The continued qualification of such plans with respect to all other contributions, allocations, and withdrawals shall be subject to all provisions of existing law, as amended from time to time. No inference shall be drawn from this paragraph as to whether an amount is a contribution deductible under section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 rather than a non-deductible capital expenditure.

"(12) Except as provided in section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105), the issuance and sale or contribution of securities by Norfolk Southern Corporation to fulfill arrangements with the Corporation's employees in implementing the Secretary's Plan and the distribution of shares from the Corporation's employee stock ownership plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall not be subject to the registration and prospectus delivery requirements of the Securities Act of 1933, any approval requirement under subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code, or the laws of any State with respect to the issuance and sale of securities.".

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (o) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

SEC. 304. The Secretary shall, no later than January 31 of each year, submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report setting forth each certificate which Norfolk Southern Corporation and Conrail provided to the Secretary, during the preceding year, certifying compliance with the covenants contained in the Definitive Agreements.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 305. If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 306. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the provisions of and amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) Sections 108(a), 201 and 202 of this Act shall take effect on the date of consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

AMENDMENT NO. 1541

On page 3, line 16, immediately after the word "stock" strike out through line 23, and insert in lieu thereof a period.

AMENDMENT NO. 1542

On page 3, line 16, immediately after the word "stock" strike out through line 23, and insert in lieu thereof a period.

AMENDMENT NO. 1543

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 4. (a) In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term—

(1) "Conrail" means the Consolidated Rail Corporation;

(2) "Definitive Agreements" means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (4)(A);

(3) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation; and

(4) "Secretary's Plan" means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E.

(b) Section 102 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 702) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (6) through (18) as paragraphs (7) through (19), and paragraphs (19) through (21) as paragraphs (21) through (23), respectively;

(2) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following paragraph:

"(6) 'Definitive Agreements' means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (20)(A);"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (19), as so redesignated, the following paragraph:

"(20) 'Secretary's Plan' means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E;".

(c) Section 1135(a) of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1104(a)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (6), (7), and (8) as paragraphs (7), (8), and (10), respectively;

(2) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following paragraph:

"(6) 'Definitive Agreements' means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (9)(A);"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (8), as so redesignated, the following paragraph:

"(9) 'Secretary's Plan' means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E;".

"(19) section 714 of this Act, but only with regard to disputes or controversies specified in such section that arose prior to consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation; and

"(20) section 715 of this Act, as amended by the Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985.".

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE SECRETARY'S PLAN

SEC. 104. (a) Section 401(a)(3) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(a)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) The Secretary is authorized and directed to implement the Secretary's Plan, in accordance with paragraph (4) of this subsection. Such implementation of the Secretary's Plan and the coordinated operation of the Corporation's properties with those of Norfolk Southern Corporation and its affiliates as a single rail system is deemed approved by the Commission under chapter 113 of title 49, United States Code.".

(b) Section 401(a) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(4) The Secretary shall implement the Secretary's Plan by negotiating, executing, delivering, and performing the Definitive Agreements, which shall conform to the Memorandum of Intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act. The Secretary shall, 45 calendar days before the date on which the Secretary anticipates that the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation will be sold to Norfolk Southern Corporation, transmit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a notification of any alteration from the Memorandum of Intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act which will be made in the Definitive Agreements. After the date of such sale, the Secretary shall transmit to such Committees notification of any intent to waive compliance with any substantive covenant, agreement or obligation contained in the Definitive Agreements, and the Secretary may not waive such compliance until a period of 45 calendar days has expired after the date of such transmittal.

"(5) The Secretary shall not transfer the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation except concurrently with a divestiture by Norfolk Southern Corporation of rail assets and rights approved by the Attorney General.

"(6) The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation shall be deemed to be consummated at the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.".

RAILROAD PURCHASERS AND OFFER FOR SALE OF SHARES TO EMPLOYEES

SEC. 105. Subsections (d) and (e) of section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(d) and (e)) are repealed.

CANCELLATION OF DEBT AND PREFERRED STOCK

SEC. 106. Section 402 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 762) is amended to read as follows:

"DEBT AND PREFERRED STOCK

"SEC. 402. (a) RECAPITALIZATION.—In connection with the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation under section 401 of this Act, and consistent with the Secretary's Plan, the Secretary may take all action necessary to cause the Corporation to be recapitalized such that the interest of the United States, or any agent or instrumentality thereof, and all other commitments or obligations of the Corporation to the United States or any agent or instrumentality thereof arising out of such interest, in any debt (including accrued interest and contingent interest thereon) and preferred stock (including accrued and unpaid dividends thereon) of the Corporation shall be cancelled or retired, and contributed to the capital of the Corporation. The Secretary shall cause the recapitalization authorized by this section to be effective as of the consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation.

"(b) BREACH OF REPRESENTATIONS.—(1) Norfolk Southern Corporation or any successor corporation thereto may bring suit for any breach of representations contained in paragraph 6(e) of the Memorandum of Intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act (hereinafter referred to as the 'Representations') in the United States Claims Court or a district court of the United States. If such an action is brought, the Claims Court or district court shall determine the amount by which the United States income tax (including interest and penalties whether or not such penalties are assessed as a tax under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) assessable against the Corporation or against Norfolk Southern Corporation for any year exceeds the amount of such tax which would have been assessable for such year had such Representations not been breached (hereinafter referred to as the 'Offset Amount').

"(2) The Representations shall be considered breached and Norfolk Southern Corporation shall be entitled to bring suit upon the first occurrence of any of the following that is inconsistent with the Representations: (A) the issuance by the Internal Revenue Service of a statutory notice of deficiency (90-day letter), (B) the assessment of the United States income tax, or (C) any claim by the United States in a suit or other judicial proceeding against Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation.

"(3) The right to bring suit pursuant to this section shall not be subject to any waiting period applicable to tax proceedings or to any requirements for payment of any tax as a condition to instituting any suit based on a breach of the Representations.

"(4) Any judgment for money damages relating to breach of the Representations shall only be awarded as an offset in any court or administrative proceeding against the tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation, or both, to which such breach relates; except that if any such tax liability resulting from such breach has been paid, the judgment shall to that extent be an offset against any United States income tax liability of the Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation, or both. If any portion of the tax resulting from a breach of the Representations has been paid, then the Offset Amount shall include interest on such payment from the date paid at the rate from time to time specified in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for interest payable on refund claims.

"(5) It shall not be a defense to an action brought under this section that Norfolk Southern Corporation knew, or should have known, of the falsity of the Representations or that there exists no carryover basis procedure as contemplated by the last sentence of the Representations.

"(6) For purposes of this section, tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation shall include the tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation and its affiliated group, within the meaning of section 1504 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.".

APPLICABILITY OF CERTAIN LAWS TO SALE OF CONRAIL

SEC. 107. Section 408 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 768) is amended—

(1) by repealing subsection (b);

(2) by amending subsection (c) by striking "No transfer" and all that follows through "subject to" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105), the Secretary's Plan and the Definitive Agreements and their negotiation, execution, and implementation shall not be subject to administrative or"; and

(3) by adding at the end of subsection (c) the following sentence: "The issuance in private placement of notes or other securities in accordance with exhibit B to the Memorandum of Intent (described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act) in the Secretary's Plan shall not be subject to the provisions of subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code.".

"PROTECTION AFTER SALE

"SEC. 715. After consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation pursuant to the Secretary's Plan, any employee of Norfolk Southern Corporation, the Corporation, any rail affiliate of either company, and any transferee of the rail tracks, rights, and facilities divested in accordance with the Secretary's Plan, who is adversely affected in his employment by the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall receive from his employer protection under the labor protective conditions set forth in New York Dock Railway—Control—Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal (354 ICC 399 (1978), modified upon further consideration, 360 ICC 60 (1979)). The arbitration provisions of section 4 of New York Dock shall apply to the formation of any implementing agreements that may be necessary in connection with the implementation of the Secretary's Plan, including any resulting coordinations.".

(2) The table of contents of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 is amended by inserting immediately after the item relating to section 714 the following item:

"Sec. 715. Protection after sale.".

PREFERENTIAL HIRING

SEC. 109. Section 703 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 797b) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c); and

(2) by inserting immediately after subsection (a) the following subsection:

"(b) IMPLEMENTATION OF SECRETARY'S PLAN.—Any employee of any railroad who is deprived of employment as a result of the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall have the first right of hire for a vacancy for which he is qualified on any Norfolk Southern Corporation rail subsidiary, except where such vacancy is covered by (1) an affirmative action plan, or a hiring plan designated to eliminate discrimination, that is required by Federal or State statute, regulation, or Executive order, or by the order of a Federal court or agency, or (2) a permissible voluntary affirmative action plan. For purposes of this subsection, a railroad shall not be considered to be hiring new employees when it recalls any of its own furloughed employees.".

CROSS CRAFT EMPLOYMENT

SEC. 110. (a) Title VII of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 797 et seq.) is amended by inserting immediately after section 703 the following section:

"CROSS CRAFT EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 703A. Any employee of Norfolk and Western Railway Company, Southern Railway Company, or the Corporation who is deprived of employment as a result of the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall have the first right of hire for any vacancy for which such employee is qualified at the entry level of any Norfolk Southern Corporation rail subsidiary, without regard to craft or class or the provisions of section 703 of this Act. Such employee shall retain his seniority rights to return to his original craft or class whenever a vacancy occurs. For purposes of this section, a railroad shall not be considered to be hiring new employees when it recalls any of its own furloughed employees.".

(b) The table of contents of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 is amended by inserting immediately after the item relating to section 703 the following item:

"Sec. 703A. Cross craft employment.".

Subtitle B—Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 Amendments

SPECIAL COURT JURISDICTION

SEC. 121. (a) Section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or the Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985" immediately after "subtitle" wherever it appears;

(2) in subsection (a), by striking "or" at the end of paragraph (3), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(5) brought by the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof seeking to enforce the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements;

"(6) brought by Norfolk Southern Corporation seeking to enforce the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements;

"(7) brought by a party who filed a complaint with the Secretary under subsection (e) of this section, and who is aggrieved by (A) a determination of the Secretary under paragraph (1) of such subsection that the party has not suffered direct economic injury, or (B) a decision of the Secretary under paragraph (2) of such subsection that a covenant has not been violated;

"(8) brought by a party which is a signatory to an ancillary agreement entered into in accordance with the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements and which is seeking to enforce such ancillary agreement; or

"(9) brought to determine the value of the interest of the employee stock ownership plan and related trusts, or of the beneficiaries thereof, in the preferred stock of the Conrail Equity Corporation.

For purposes of any action brought under paragraph (5) of this subsection, a violation of any covenant contained in the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements shall be deemed to constitute immediate and irreparable harm for purposes of awarding injunctive relief to the United States.".

(b) Section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(e)(1) Any party who suffers direct economic injury as a result of an alleged violation of a covenant contained in the Definitive Agreements may file a complaint with the Secretary seeking enforcement of such covenant. If the Secretary determines that the complainant has demonstrated to the Secretary that it has suffered direct economic injury, the Secretary shall investigate the complaint.

"(2) If the Secretary decides to investigate a complaint under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Secretary shall give reasonable notice of such decision to investigate to the alleged violator of such covenant and the complainant, and shall make a final decision on such complaint within 60 days after the date on which it was filed.

"(3) If the Secretary finds that (A) the covenant in question has been violated, and (B) the complainant suffered direct economic injury as a result of such violation, the Secretary shall enter an order directing the violator of such covenant to comply with such covenant.

"(4) On appeal, any decision by the Secretary under this subsection shall be upheld, unless such decision is found to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.".

APPLICABILITY OF OTHER LAWS

SEC. 122. Section 1168(a) of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1116(a)) is amended by striking "service transfers" and inserting in lieu thereof "sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail or transfer of the rail properties and freight service responsibilities of Conrail".

Subtitle C—Employee Stock Ownership Plan

RESPONSIBILITY OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLAN FIDUCIARIES

SEC. 131. (a) Section 216(f)(8)(A) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)(8)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of clause (ii);

(2) by striking the period at the end of clause (iii) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following clause:

"(iv) for or in connection with any action taken to implement the Secretary's Plan, including any sale, exchange, valuation, or disposition of the plan and related trust assets, or the assets of Conrail Equity Corporation, in connection with implementation of the Secretary's Plan and any determination of the terms on which any such sale, exchange, valuation, or disposition is effected.".

QUALIFICATION, REVIEW, AND VALUATION OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS

SEC. 132. Section 216(f) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(11) The employee stock ownership plans of the Corporation and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall be deemed to meet the qualification requirements of sections 401 and 501, respectively, of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, notwithstanding (A) that such plans may not meet the requirements of section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or (B) that participants in such plans may be entitled to withdraw a portion of the shares allocated to their accounts prior to the expiration of the period generally imposed by the Internal Revenue Service for qualified plans. Such qualification shall relate only to the contributions, allocations, and withdrawals of shares provided for in the Secretary's Plan with respect to the plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan. Such contributions and allocations shall in no event be treated as having exceeded the maximum annual addition permitted under section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (but not for purposes of applying section 404(j) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) for purposes of calculating any limitation under section 415 with respect to contributions and allocations not described in the Secretary's Plan, including contributions and allocations to plans and related trusts of the Corporation and any affiliated corporation. The continued qualification of such plans with respect to all other contributions, allocations, and withdrawals shall be subject to all provisions of existing law, as amended from time to time. No inference shall be drawn from this paragraph as to whether an amount is a contribution deductible under section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 rather than a non-deductible capital expenditure.

"(12) Except as provided in section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105), the issuance and sale or contribution of securities by Norfolk Southern Corporation to fulfill arrangements with the Corporation's employees in implementing the Secretary's Plan and the distribution of shares from the Corporation's employee stock ownership plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall not be subject to the registration and prospectus delivery requirements of the Securities Act of 1933, any approval requirement under subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code, or the laws of any State with respect to the issuance and sale of securities.".

TITLE II—TECHNICAL AND CONFORMING AMENDMENTS

REGIONAL RAIL REORGANIZATION ACT OF 1973 AMENDMENTS AND REPEALS

SEC. 201. The following provisions of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 are repealed or amended as specified:

(1) Subsections (a) and (b) of section 214 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 724(a) and (b)) are repealed, and such section 214 is amended by striking "(c) ASSOCIATION.—".

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

SEC. 304. The Secretary shall, no later than January 31 of each year, submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report setting forth each certificate which Norfolk Southern Corporation and Conrail provided to the Secretary, during the preceding year, certifying compliance with the covenants contained in the Definitive Agreements.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 305. If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 306. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the provisions of and amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) Sections 108(a), 201 and 202 of this Act shall take effect on the date of consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

(c) Any provision of this Act which, pursuant to Article I, Section 7 of the Constitution, provides for raising revenue shall only be effective upon the enactment into law of a bill which has originated in the House of Representatives enacting such provision.

AMENDMENT No. 1544

On page 3, line 15, beginning with "debt", strike out all through the first "and" on line 16.

AMENDMENT No. 1545

On page 3, line 15, beginning with "debt", strike out all through the first "and" on line 16.

AMENDMENT No. 1546

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 4. (a) In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term—

(1) "Conrail" means the Consolidated Rail Corporation;

(2) "Definitive Agreements" means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (4)(A);

(3) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation; and

(4) "Secretary's Plan" means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E.

(b) Section 102 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 702) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (6) through (18) as paragraphs (7) through (19), and paragraphs (19) through (21) as paragraphs (21) through (23), respectively;

(2) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following paragraph:

"(6) 'Definitive Agreements' means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (20)(A);"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (19), as so redesignated, the following paragraph:

"(20) 'Secretary's Plan' means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E;".

(c) Section 1135(a) of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1104(a)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (6), (7), and (8) as paragraphs (7), (8), and (10), respectively;

(2) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following paragraph:

"(6) 'Definitive Agreements' means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (9)(A);"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (8), as so redesignated, the following paragraph:

"(9) 'Secretary's Plan' means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E;".

"(20) section 715 of this Act, as amended by the Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985.".

IMPLEMENTATION OF THE SECRETARY'S PLAN

SEC. 104. (a) Section 401(a)(3) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(a)(3)) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) The Secretary is authorized and directed to implement the Secretary's Plan, in accordance with paragraph (4) of this subsection. Such implementation of the Secretary's Plan and the coordinated operation of the Corporation's properties with those of Norfolk Southern Corporation and its affiliates as a single rail system is deemed approved by the Commission under chapter 113 of title 49, United States Code.".

(b) Section 401(a) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(4) The Secretary shall implement the Secretary's Plan by negotiating, executing, delivering, and performing the Definitive Agreements, which shall conform to the Memorandum of Intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act. The Secretary shall, 45 calendar days before the date on which the Secretary anticipates that the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation will be sold to Norfolk Southern Corporation, transmit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a notification of any alteration from the Memorandum of Intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act which will be made in the Definitive Agreements. After the date of such sale, the Secretary shall transmit to such Committees notification of any intent to waive compliance with any substantive covenant, agreement or obligation contained in the Definitive Agreements, and the Secretary may not waive such compliance until a period of 45 calendar days has expired after the date of such transmittal.

"(5) The Secretary shall not transfer the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation except concurrently with a divestiture by Norfolk Southern Corporation of rail assets and rights approved by the Attorney General.

"(6) The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation shall be deemed to be consummated at the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.".

RAILROAD PURCHASERS AND OFFER FOR SALE OF SHARES TO EMPLOYEES

SEC. 105. Subsection (d) of section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(d) is repealed.

CANCELLATION OF DEBT AND PREFERRED STOCK

SEC. 106. Section 402 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 762) is amended to read as follows:

"DEBT AND PREFERRED STOCK

"SEC. 402. (a) RECAPITALIZATION.—In connection with the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation under section 401 of this Act, and consistent with the Secretary's Plan, the Secretary may take all action necessary to cause the Corporation to be recapitalized such that the interest of the United States, or any agent or instrumentality thereof, and all other commitments or obligations of the Corporation to the United States or any agent or instrumentality thereof arising out of such interest, in any debt (including accrued interest and contingent interest thereon) and preferred stock (including accrued and unpaid dividends thereon) of the Corporation shall be cancelled or retired, and contributed to the capital of the Corporation. The Secretary shall cause the recapitalization authorized by this section to be effective as of the consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation.

"(b) BREACH OF REPRESENTATIONS.—(1) Norfolk Southern Corporation or any successor corporation thereto may bring suit for any breach of representations contained in paragraph 6(e) of the Memorandum of Intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act (hereinafter referred to as the 'Representations') in the United States Claims Court or a district court of the United States. If such an action is brought, the Claims Court or district court shall determine the amount by which the United States income tax (including interest and penalties whether or not such penalties are assessed as a tax under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) assessable against the Corporation or against Norfolk Southern Corporation for any year exceeds the amount of such tax which would have been assessable for such year had such Representations not been breached (hereinafter referred to as the 'Offset Amount').

"(2) The Representations shall be considered breached and Norfolk Southern Corporation shall be entitled to bring suit upon the first occurrence of any of the following that is inconsistent with the Representations: (A) the issuance by the Internal Revenue Service of a statutory notice of deficiency (90-day letter), (B) the assessment of the United States income tax, or (C) any claim by the United States in a suit or other judicial proceeding against Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation.

"(3) The right to bring suit pursuant to this section shall not be subject to any waiting period applicable to tax proceedings or to any requirements for payment of any tax as a condition to instituting any suit based on a breach of the Representations.

"(4) Any judgment for money damages relating to breach of the Representations shall only be awarded as an offset in any court or administrative proceeding against the tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation, or both, to which such breach relates; except that if any such tax liability resulting from such breach has been paid, the judgment shall to that extent be an offset against any United States income tax liability of the Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation, or both. If any portion of the tax resulting from a breach of the Representations has been paid, then the Offset Amount shall include interest on such payment from the date paid at the rate from time to time specified in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for interest payable on refund claims.

"(5) It shall not be a defense to an action brought under this section that Norfolk Southern Corporation knew, or should have known, of the falsity of the Representations or that there exists no carryover basis procedure as contemplated by the last sentence of the Representations.

"(6) For purposes of this section, tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation shall include the tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation and its affiliated group, within the meaning of section 1504 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.".

APPLICABILITY OF CERTAIN LAWS TO SALE OF CONRAIL

SEC. 107. Section 408 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 768) is amended—

(1) by repealing subsection (b);

(2) by amending subsection (c) by striking "No transfer" and all that follows through "subject to" and inserting in lieu thereof "Except as provided in section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105), the Secretary's Plan and the Definitive Agreements and their negotiation, execution, and implementation shall not be subject to administrative or"; and

(3) by adding at the end of subsection (c) the following sentence: "The issuance in private placement of notes or other securities in accordance with exhibit B to the Memorandum of Intent (described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act) in the Secretary's Plan shall not be subject to the provisions of subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code.".

"PROTECTION AFTER SALE

"SEC. 715. After consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation pursuant to the Secretary's Plan, any employee of Norfolk Southern Corporation, the Corporation, any rail affiliate of either company, and any transferee of the rail tracks, rights, and facilities divested in accordance with the Secretary's Plan, who is adversely affected in his employment by the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall receive from his employer protection under the labor protective conditions set forth in New York Dock Railway—Control—Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal (354 ICC 399 (1978), modified upon further consideration, 360 ICC 60 (1979)). The arbitration provisions of section 4 of New York Dock shall apply to the formation of any implementing agreements that may be necessary in connection with the implementation of the Secretary's Plan, including any resulting coordinations.".

(2) The table of contents of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 is amended by inserting immediately after the item relating to section 714 the following item:

"Sec. 715. Protection after sale.".

PREFERENTIAL HIRING

SEC. 109. Section 703 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 797b) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c); and

(2) by inserting immediately after subsection (a) the following subsection:

"(b) IMPLEMENTATION OF SECRETARY'S PLAN.—Any employee of any railroad who is deprived of employment as a result of the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall have the first right of hire for a vacancy for which he is qualified on any Norfolk Southern Corporation rail subsidiary, except where such vacancy is covered by (1) an affirmative action plan, or a hiring plan designated to eliminate discrimination, that is required by Federal or State statute, regulation, or Executive order, or by the order of a Federal court or agency, or (2) a permissible voluntary affirmative action plan. For purposes of this subsection, a railroad shall not be considered to be hiring new employees when it recalls any of its own furloughed employees.".

CROSS CRAFT EMPLOYMENT

SEC. 110. (a) Title VII of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 797 et seq.) is amended by inserting immediately after section 703 the following section:

"CROSS CRAFT EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 703A. Any employee of Norfolk and Western Railway Company, Southern Railway Company, or the Corporation who is deprived of employment as a result of the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall have the first right of hire for any vacancy for which such employee is qualified at the entry level of any Norfolk Southern Corporation rail subsidiary, without regard to craft or class or the provisions of section 703 of this Act. Such employee shall retain his seniority rights to return to his original craft or class whenever a vacancy occurs. For purposes of this section, a railroad shall not be considered to be hiring new employees when it recalls any of its own furloughed employees.".

(b) The table of contents of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 is amended by inserting immediately after the item relating to section 703 the following item:

"Sec. 703A. Cross craft employment.".

Subtitle B—Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 Amendments

SPECIAL COURT JURISDICTION

SEC. 121. (a) Section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or the Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985" immediately after "subtitle" wherever it appears;

(2) in subsection (a), by striking "or" at the end of paragraph (3), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(5) brought by the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof seeking to enforce the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements;

"(6) brought by Norfolk Southern Corporation seeking to enforce the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements;

"(7) brought by a party who filed a complaint with the Secretary under subsection (e) of this section, and who is aggrieved by (A) a determination of the Secretary under paragraph (1) of such subsection that the party has not suffered direct economic injury, or (B) a decision of the Secretary under paragraph (2) of such subsection that a covenant has not been violated;

"(8) brought by a party which is a signatory to an ancillary agreement entered into in accordance with the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements and which is seeking to enforce such ancillary agreement; or

"(9) brought to determine the value of the interest of the employee stock ownership plan and related trusts, or of the beneficiaries thereof, in the preferred stock of the Conrail Equity Corporation.

For purposes of any action brought under paragraph (5) of this subsection, a violation of any covenant contained in the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements shall be deemed to constitute immediate and irreparable harm for purposes of awarding injunctive relief to the United States.".

(b) Section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(e)(1) Any party who suffers direct economic injury as a result of an alleged violation of a covenant contained in the Definitive Agreements may file a complaint with the Secretary seeking enforcement of such covenant. If the Secretary determines that the complainant has demonstrated to the Secretary that it has suffered direct economic injury, the Secretary shall investigate the complaint.

"(2) If the Secretary decides to investigate a complaint under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Secretary shall give reasonable notice of such decision to investigate to the alleged violator of such covenant and the complainant, and shall make a final decision on such complaint within 60 days after the date on which it was filed.

"(3) If the Secretary finds that (A) the covenant in question has been violated, and (B) the complainant suffered direct economic injury as a result of such violation, the Secretary shall enter an order directing the violator of such covenant to comply with such covenant.

"(4) On appeal, any decision by the Secretary under this subsection shall be upheld, unless such decision is found to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.".

APPLICABILITY OF OTHER LAWS

SEC. 122. Section 1168(a) of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1116(a)) is amended by striking "service transfers" and inserting in lieu thereof "sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail or transfer of the rail properties and freight service responsibilities of Conrail".

Subtitle C—Employee Stock Ownership Plan

RESPONSIBILITY OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLAN FIDUCIARIES

SEC. 131. (a) Section 216(f)(8)(A) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)(8)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of clause (ii);

(2) by striking the period at the end of clause (iii) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following clause:

"(iv) for or in connection with any action taken to implement the Secretary's Plan, including any sale, exchange, valuation, or disposition of the plan and related trust assets, or the assets of Conrail Equity Corporation, in connection with implementation of the Secretary's Plan and any determination of the terms on which any such sale, exchange, valuation, or disposition is effected.".

QUALIFICATION, REVIEW, AND VALUATION OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS

SEC. 132. Section 216(f) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(11) The employee stock ownership plans of the Corporation and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall be deemed to meet the qualification requirements of sections 401 and 501, respectively, of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, notwithstanding (A) that such plans may not meet the requirements of section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or (B) that participants in such pants may be entitled to withdraw a portion of the shares allocated to their accounts prior to the expiration of the period generally imposed by the Internal Revenue Service for qualified plans. Such qualification shall relate only to the contributions, allocations, and withdrawals of shares provided for in the Secretary's Plan with respect to the plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan. Such contributions and allocations shall in no event be treated as having exceeded the maximum annual addition permitted under section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (but not for purposes of applying section 404(j) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) for purposes of calculating any limitation under section 415 with respect to contributions and allocations not described in the Secretary's Plan, including contributions and allocations to plans and related trusts of the Corporation and any affiliated corporation. The continued qualification of such plans with respect to all other contributions, allocations, and withdrawals shall be subject to all provisions of existing law, as amended from time to time. No inference shall be drawn from this paragraph as to whether an amount is a contribution deductible under section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 rather than a non-deductible capital expenditure.

"(12) Except as provided in section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105), the issuance and sale or contribution of securities by Norfolk Southern Corporation to fulfill arrangements with the Corporation's employees in implementing the Secretary's Plan and the distribution of shares from the Corporation's employee stock ownership plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall not be subject to the registration and prospectus delivery requirements of the Securities Act of 1933, any approval requirement under subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code, or the laws of any State with respect to the issuance and sale of securities.".

(13) Section 332(d) of title 49, United States Code, is amended by striking ", the Consolidated Rail Corporation,".

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

SEC. 304. The Secretary shall, no later than January 31 of each year, submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report setting forth each certificate which Norfolk Southern Corporation and Conrail provided to the Secretary, during the preceding year, certifying compliance with the covenants contained in the Definitive Agreements.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 305. If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 306. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the provisions of and amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) Sections 108(a), 201 and 202 of this Act shall take effect on the date of consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

AMENDMENT NO. 1547

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 4. (a) In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term—

(1) "Conrail" means the Consolidated Rail Corporation;

(2) "Definitive Agreements" means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (4)(A);

(3) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation; and

(4) "Secretary's Plan" means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E.

(b) Section 102 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 702) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (6) through (18) as paragraphs (7) through (19), and paragraphs (19) through (21) as paragraphs (21) through (23), respectively;

(2) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following paragraph:

"(6) 'Definitive Agreements' means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (20)(A);"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (19), as so redesignated, the following paragraph:

"(20) 'Secretary's Plan' means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E;".

(c) Section 1135(a) of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1104(a)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (6), (7), and (8) as paragraphs (7), (8), and (10), respectively;

(2) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following paragraph:

"(6) 'Definitive Agreements' means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (9)(A);"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (8), as so redesignated, the following paragraph:

"(9) 'Secretary's Plan' means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E;".

"(8) brought by a party which is a signatory to an ancillary agreement entered into in accordance with the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements and which is seeking to enforce such ancillary agreement; or

"(9) brought to determine the value of the interest of the employee stock ownership plan and related trusts, or of the beneficiaries thereof, in the preferred stock of the Conrail Equity Corporation.

For purposes of any action brought under paragraph (5) of this subsection, a violation of any covenant contained in the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements shall be deemed to constitute immediate and irreparable harm for purposes of awarding injunctive relief to the United States.".

(b) Section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(e)(1) Any party who suffers direct economic injury as a result of an alleged violation of a covenant contained in the Definitive Agreements may file a complaint with the Secretary seeking enforcement of such covenant. If the Secretary determines that the complainant has demonstrated to the Secretary that it has suffered direct economic injury, the Secretary shall investigate the complaint.

"(2) If the Secretary decides to investigate a complaint under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Secretary shall give reasonable notice of such decision to investigate to the alleged violator of such covenant and the complainant, and shall make a final decision on such complaint within 60 days after the date on which it was filed.

"(3) If the Secretary finds that (A) the covenant in question has been violated, and (B) the complainant suffered direct economic injury as a result of such violation, the Secretary shall enter an order directing the violator of such covenant to comply with such covenant.

"(4) On appeal, any decision by the Secretary under this subsection shall be upheld, unless such decision is found to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.".

APPLICABILITY OF OTHER LAWS

SEC. 122. Section 1168(a) of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1116(a)) is amended by striking "service transfers" and inserting in lieu thereof "sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail or transfer of the rail properties and freight service responsibilities of Conrail".

Subtitle C—Employee Stock Ownership Plan

RESPONSIBILITY OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLAN FIDUCIARIES

SEC. 131. (a) Section 216(f)(8)(A) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)(8)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of clause (ii);

(2) by striking the period at the end of clause (iii) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following clause:

"(iv) for or in connection with any action taken to implement the Secretary's Plan, including any sale, exchange, valuation, or disposition of the plan and related trust assets, or the assets of Conrail Equity Corporation, in connection with implementation of the Secretary's Plan and any determination of the terms on which any such sale, exchange, valuation, or disposition is effected.".

QUALIFICATION, REVIEW, AND VALUATION OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS

SEC. 132. Section 216(f) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(11) The employee stock ownership plans of the Corporation and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall be deemed to meet the qualification requirements of sections 401 and 501, respectively, of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, notwithstanding (A) that such plans may not meet the requirements of section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or (B) that participates in such plans may be entitled to withdraw a portion of the shares allocated to their accounts prior to the expiration of the period generally imposed by the Internal Revenue Service for qualified plans. Such qualification shall relate only to the contributions, allocations, and withdrawals of shares provided for in the Secretary's Plan with respect to the plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan. Such contributions and allocations shall in no event be treated as having exceeded the maximum annual addition permitted under section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (but not for purposes of applying section 404(j) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) for purposes of calculating any limitation under section 415 with respect to contributions and allocations not described in the Secretary's Plan, including contributions and allocations to plans and related trusts of the Corporation and any affiliated corporation. The continued qualification of such plans with respect to all other contributions, allocations, and withdrawals shall be subject to all provisions of existing law, as amended from time to time. No inference shall be drawn from this paragraph as to whether an amount is a contribution deductible under section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 rather than a non-deductible capital expenditure.

"(12) Except as provided in section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105), the issuance and sale or contribution of securities by Norfolk Southern Corporation to fulfill arrangements with the Corporation's employees in implementing the Secretary's Plan and the distribution of shares from the Corporation's employee stock ownership plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall not be subject to the registration and prospectus delivery requirements of the Securities Act of 1933, any approval requirement under subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code, or the laws of any State with respect to the issuance and sale of securities.".

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

SEC. 304. The Secretary shall, no later than January 31 of each year, submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report setting forth each certificate which Norfolk Southern Corporation and Conrail provided to the Secretary, during the preceding year, certifying compliance with the covenants contained in the Definitive Agreements.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 305. If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 306. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the provisions of and amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) Sections 108(a), 201 and 202 of this Act shall take effect on the date of consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

Strike out everything beginning on page 12, line 14, through line 13 on page 15.

AMENDMENT NO. 1549

On page 12, beginning with line 11, strike out all through line 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 105. Subsection (d) of section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(d)) is repealed.".

AMENDMENT NO. 1550

On page 12, beginning with line 11, strike out all through line 13 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"SEC. 105. Subsection (d) of section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(d)) is repealed.".

AMENDMENT NO. 1551

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 4. (a) In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term—

(1) "Conrail" means the Consolidated Rail Corporation;

(2) "Definitive Agreements" means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (4)(A);

(3) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation; and

(4) "Secretary's Plan" means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E.

(b) Section 102 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 702) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (6) through (18) as paragraphs (7) through (19), and paragraphs (19) through (21) as paragraphs (21) through (23), respectively;

(2) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following paragraph:

"(6) 'Definitive Agreements' means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (20)(A);"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (19), as so redesignated, the following paragraph:

"(20) 'Secretary's Plan' means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E;".

(c) Section 1135(a) of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1104(a)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (6), (7), and (8) as paragraphs (7), (8), and (10), respectively;

(2) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following paragraph:

"(6) 'Definitive Agreements' means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (9)(A);"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (8), as so redesignated, the following paragraph:

"(9) 'Secretary's Plan' means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E;".

(1) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c); and

(2) by inserting immediately after subsection (a) the following subsection:

"(b) IMPLEMENTATION OF SECRETARY'S PLAN.—Any employee of any railroad who is deprived of employment as a result of the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall have the first right of hire for a vacancy for which he is qualified on any Norfolk Southern Corporation rail subsidiary, except where such vacancy is covered by (1) an affirmative action plan, or a hiring plan designated to eliminate discrimination, that is required by Federal or State statute, regulation, or Executive order, or by the order of a Federal court or agency, or (2) a permissible voluntary affirmative action plan. For purposes of this subsection, a railroad shall not be considered to be hiring new employees when it recalls any of its own furloughed employees.".

CROSS CRAFT EMPLOYMENT

SEC. 110. (a) Title VII of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 797 et seq.) is amended by inserting immediately after section 703 the following section:

"CROSS CRAFT EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 703A. Any employee of Norfolk and Western Railway Company, Southern Railway Company, or the Corporation who is deprived of employment as a result of the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall have the first right of hire for any vacancy for which such employee is qualified at the entry level of any Norfolk Southern Corporation rail subsidiary, without regard to craft or class or the provisions of section 703 of this Act. Such employee shall retain his seniority rights to return to his original craft or class whenever a vacancy occurs. For purposes of this section, a railroad shall not be considered to be hiring new employees when it recalls any of its own furloughed employees.".

(b) The table of contents of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 is amended by inserting immediately after the item relating to section 703 the following item:

"Sec. 703A. Cross craft employment.".

Subtitle B—Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 Amendments

SPECIAL COURT JURISDICTION

SEC. 121. (a) Section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or the Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985" immediately after "subtitle" wherever it appears;

(2) in subsection (a), by striking "or" at the end of paragraph (3), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(5) brought by the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof seeking to enforce the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements;

"(6) brought by Norfolk Southern Corporation seeking to enforce the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements;

"(7) brought by a party who filed a complaint with the Secretary under subsection (e) of this section, and who is aggrieved by (A) a determination of the Secretary under paragraph (1) of such subsection that the party has not suffered direct economic injury, or (B) a decision of the Secretary under paragraph (2) of such subsection that a covenant has not been violated;

"(8) brought by a party which is a signatory to an ancillary agreement entered into in accordance with the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements and which is seeking to enforce such ancillary agreement; or

"(9) brought to determine the value of the interest of the employee stock ownership plan and related trusts, or of the beneficiaries thereof, in the preferred stock of the Conrail Equity Corporation.

For purposes of any action brought under paragraph (5) of this subsection, a violation of any covenant contained in the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements shall be deemed to constitute immediate and irreparable harm for purposes of awarding injunctive relief to the United States.".

(b) Section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(e)(1) Any party who suffers direct economic injury as a result of an alleged violation of a covenant contained in the Definitive Agreements may file a complaint with the Secretary seeking enforcement of such covenant. If the Secretary determines that the complainant has demonstrated to the Secretary that it has suffered direct economic injury, the Secretary shall investigate the complaint.

"(2) If the Secretary decides to investigate a complaint under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Secretary shall give reasonable notice of such decision to investigate to the alleged violator of such covenant and the complainant, and shall make a final decision on such complaint within 60 days after the date on which it was filed.

"(3) If the Secretary finds that (A) the covenant in question has been violated, and (B) the complainant suffered direct economic injury as a result of such violation, the Secretary shall enter an order directing the violator of such covenant to comply with such covenant.

"(4) On appeal, any decision by the Secretary under this subsection shall be upheld, unless such decision is found to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.".

APPLICABILITY OF OTHER LAWS

SEC. 122. Section 1168(a) of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1116(a)) is amended by striking "service transfers" and inserting in lieu thereof "sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail or transfer of the rail properties and freight service responsibilities of Conrail".

Subtitle C—Employee Stock Ownership Plan

RESPONSIBILITY OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLAN FIDUCIARIES

SEC. 131. (a) Section 216(f)(8)(A) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)(8)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of clause (ii);

(2) by striking the period at the end of clause (iii) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following clause:

"(iv) for or in connection with any action taken to implement the Secretary's Plan, including any sale, exchange, valuation, or disposition of the plan and related trust assets, or the assets of Conrail Equity Corporation, in connection with implementation of the Secretary's Plan and any determination of the terms on which any such sale, exchange, valuation, or disposition is effected.".

QUALIFICATION, REVIEW, AND VALUATION OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS

SEC. 132. Section 216(f) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(11) The employee stock ownership plans of the Corporation and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall be deemed to meet the qualification requirements of sections 401 and 501, respectively, of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, notwithstanding (A) that such plans may not meet the requirements of section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or (B) that participants in such plans may be entitled to withdraw a portion of the shares allocated to their accounts prior to the expiration of the period generally imposed by the Internal Revenue Service for qualified plans. Such qualification shall relate only to the contributions, allocations, and withdrawals of shares provided for in the Secretary's Plan with respect to the plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan. Such contributions and allocations shall in no event be treated as having exceeded the maximum annual addition permitted under section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (but not for purposes of applying section 404(j) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) for purposes of calculating any limitation under section 415 with respect to contributions and allocations not described in the Secretary's Plan, including contributions and allocations to plans and related trusts of the Corporation and any affiliated corporation. The continued qualification of such plans with respect to all other contributions, allocations, and withdrawals shall be subject to all provisions of existing law, as amended from time to time. No inference shall be drawn from this paragraph as to whether an amount is a contribution deductible under section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 rather than a non-deductible capital expenditure.

"(12) Except as provided in section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105), the issuance and sale or contribution of securities by Norfolk Southern Corporation to fulfill arrangements with the Corporation's employees in implementing the Secretary's Plan and the distribution of shares from the Corporation's employee stock ownership plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall not be subject to the registration and prospectus delivery requirements of the Securities Act of 1933, any approval requirement under subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code, or the laws of any State with respect to the issuance and sale of securities.".

(13) Section 332(d) of title 49, United States Code, is amended by striking ", the Consolidated Rail Corporation,".

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

SEC. 304. The Secretary shall, no later than January 31 of each year, submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report setting forth each certificate which Norfolk Southern Corporation and Conrail provided to the Secretary, during the preceding year, certifying compliance with the covenants contained in the Definitive Agreements.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 305. If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 306. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the provisions of and amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) Sections 108(a), 201 and 202 of this Act shall take effect on the date of consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

AMENDMENT NO. 1552

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) acting under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763), the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation;

(4) acting under section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761), the Secretary engaged an investment banker and arranged, through open competitive bidding and negotiation, to sell the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail;

(5) the Secretary's Plan for the sale of Conrail provides for sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation;

(6) the Secretary found that sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation best meets the sale criteria of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region Conrail serves, and (C) maximizing return to the Federal Government consistent with the criteria specified in clauses (A) and (B);

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 701 et seq.) and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock; and

(8) the Secretary's Plan satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)).

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is therefore declared to be the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating implementation of the Secretary's Plan for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 4. (a) In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term—

(1) "Conrail" means the Consolidated Rail Corporation;

(2) "Definitive Agreements" means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (4)(A);

(3) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation; and

(4) "Secretary's Plan" means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E.

(b) Section 102 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 702) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (6) through (18) as paragraphs (7) through (19), and paragraphs (19) through (21) as paragraphs (21) through (23), respectively;

(2) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following paragraph:

"(6) 'Definitive Agreements' means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (20)(A);"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (19), as so redesignated, the following paragraph:

"(20) 'Secretary's Plan' means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment

A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E;".

(c) Section 1135(a) of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1104(a)) is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraphs (6), (7), and (8) as paragraphs (7), (8), and (10), respectively;

(2) by inserting after paragraph (5) the following paragraph:

"(6) 'Definitive Agreements' means any and all agreements existing or to be developed between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation, including all representations and warranties made therein, to implement the Memorandum of Intent described in paragraph (9)(A);"; and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (8), as so redesignated, the following paragraph:

"(9) 'Secretary's Plan' means (A) the Memorandum of Intent between the United States and Norfolk Southern Corporation signed February 8, 1985, and (B) the divestitures by the Norfolk Southern Corporation of certain rail tracks, rights, and facilities, and any transactions or agreements related or incidental to such divestitures, in connection with the implementation of attachment A to the letter from the Department of Justice attached to the Memorandum of Intent as exhibit E;".

(b)(1) Title VII of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 797 et seq.) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following section:

"PROTECTION AFTER SALE

"SEC. 715. After consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation pursuant to the Secretary's Plan, any employee of Norfolk Southern Corporation, the Corporation, any rail affiliate of either company, and any transferee of the rail tracks, rights, and facilities divested in accordance with the Secretary's Plan, who is adversely affected in his employment by the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall receive from his employer protection under the labor protective conditions set forth in New York Dock Railway—Control—Brooklyn Eastern District Terminal (354 ICC 399 (1978), modified upon further consideration, 360 ICC 60 (1979)). The arbitration provisions of section 4 of New York Dock shall apply to the formation of any implementing agreements that may be necessary in connection with the implementation of the Secretary's Plan, including any resulting coordinations.".

(2) The table of contents of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 is amended by inserting immediately after the item relating to section 714 the following item:

"Sec. 715. Protection after sale.".

PREFERENTIAL HIRING

SEC. 109. Section 703 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 797b) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c); and

(2) by inserting immediately after subsection (a) the following subsection:

"(b) IMPLEMENTATION OF SECRETARY'S PLAN.—Any employee of any railroad who is deprived of employment as a result of the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall have the first right of hire for a vacancy for which he is qualified on any Norfolk Southern Corporation rail subsidiary, except where such vacancy is covered by (1) an affirmative action plan, or a hiring plan designated to eliminate discrimination, that is required by Federal or State statute, regulation, or Executive order, or by the order of a Federal court or agency, or (2) a permissible voluntary affirmative action plan. For purposes of this subsection, a railroad shall not be considered to be hiring new employees when it recalls any of its own furloughed employees.".

CROSS CRAFT EMPLOYMENT

SEC. 110. (a) Title VII of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 797 et seq.) is amended by inserting immediately after section 703 the following section:

"CROSS CRAFT EMPLOYMENT

"SEC. 703A. Any employee of Norfolk and Western Railway Company, Southern Railway Company, or the Corporation who is deprived of employment as a result of the implementation of the Secretary's Plan shall have the first right of hire for any vacancy for which such employee is qualified at the entry level of any Norfolk Southern Corporation rail subsidiary, without regard to craft or class or the provisions of section 703 of this Act. Such employee shall retain his seniority rights to return to his original craft or class whenever a vacancy occurs. For purposes of this section, a railroad shall not be considered to be hiring new employees when it recalls any of its own furloughed employees.".

(b) The table of contents of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 is amended by inserting immediately after the item relating to section 703 the following item:

"Sec. 703A. Cross craft employment.".

Subtitle B—Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 Amendments

SPECIAL COURT JURISDICTION

SEC. 121. (a) Section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or the Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985" immediately after "subtitle" wherever it appears;

(2) in subsection (a), by striking "or" at the end of paragraph (3), by striking the period at the end of paragraph (4) and inserting in lieu thereof a semicolon, and by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(5) brought by the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof seeking to enforce the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements;

"(6) brought by Norfolk Southern Corporation seeking to enforce the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements;

"(7) brought by a party who filed a complaint with the Secretary under subsection (e) of this section, and who is aggrieved by (A) a determination of the Secretary under paragraph (1) of such subsection that the party has not suffered direct economic injury, or (B) a decision of the Secretary under paragraph (2) of such subsection that a covenant has not been violated;

"(8) brought by a party which is a signatory to an ancillary agreement entered into in accordance with the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements and which is seeking to enforce such ancillary agreement; or

"(9) brought to determine the value of the interest of the employee stock ownership plan and related trusts, or of the beneficiaries thereof, in the preferred stock of the Conrail Equity Corporation.

For purposes of any action brought under paragraph (5) of this subsection, a violation of any covenant contained in the Secretary's Plan or the Definitive Agreements shall be deemed to constitute immediate and irreparable harm for purposes of awarding injunctive relief to the United States.".

(b) Section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following subsection:

"(e)(1) Any party who suffers direct economic injury as a result of an alleged violation of a covenant contained in the Definitive Agreements may file a complaint with the Secretary seeking enforcement of such covenant. If the Secretary determines that the complainant has demonstrated to the Secretary that it has suffered direct economic injury, the Secretary shall investigate the complaint.

"(2) If the Secretary decides to investigate a complaint under paragraph (1) of this subsection, the Secretary shall give reasonable notice of such decision to investigate to the alleged violator of such covenant and the complainant, and shall make a final decision on such complaint within 60 days after the date on which it was filed.

"(3) If the Secretary finds that (A) the covenant in question has been violated, and (B) the complainant suffered direct economic injury as a result of such violation, the Secretary shall enter an order directing the violator of such covenant to comply with such covenant.

"(4) On appeal, any decision by the Secretary under this subsection shall be upheld, unless such decision is found to be arbitrary, capricious, an abuse of discretion, or otherwise not in accordance with law.".

APPLICABILITY OF OTHER LAWS

SEC. 122. Section 1168(a) of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1116(a)) is amended by striking "service transfers" and inserting in lieu thereof "sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail or transfer of the rail properties and freight service responsibilities of Conrail".

Subtitle C—Employee Stock Ownership Plan

RESPONSIBILITY OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLAN FIDUCIARIES

SEC. 131. (a) Section 216(f)(8)(A) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)(8)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of clause (ii);

(2) by striking the period at the end of clause (iii) and inserting in lieu thereof "; or"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following clause:

"(iv) for or in connection with any action taken to implement the Secretary's Plan, including any sale, exchange, valuation, or disposition of the plan and related trust assets, or the assets of Conrail Equity Corporation, in connection with implementation of the Secretary's Plan and any determination of the terms on which any such sale, exchange, valuation, or disposition is effected.".

QUALIFICATION, REVIEW, AND VALUATION OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS

SEC. 132. Section 216(f) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(11) The employee stock ownership plans of the Corporation and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall be deemed to meet the qualification requirements of sections 401 and 501, respectively, of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, notwithstanding (A) that such plans may not meet the requirements of section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, or (B) that participants in such plans may be entitled to withdraw a portion of the shares allocated to their accounts prior to the expiration of the period generally imposed by the Internal Revenue Service for qualified plans. Such qualification shall relate only to the contributions, allocations, and withdrawals of shares provided for in the Secretary's Plan with respect to the plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan. Such contributions and allocations shall in no event be treated as having exceeded the maximum annual addition permitted under section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (but not for purposes of applying section 404(j) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) for purposes of calculating any limitation under section 415 with respect to contributions and allocations not described in the Secretary's Plan, including contributions and allocations to plans and related trusts of the Corporation and any affiliated corporation. The continued qualification of such plans with respect to all other contributions, allocations, and withdrawals shall be subject to all provisions of existing law, as amended from time to time. No inference shall be drawn from this paragraph as to whether an amount is a contribution deductible under section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 rather than a non-deductible capital expenditure.

"(12) Except as provided in section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105), the issuance and sale or contribution of securities by Norfolk Southern Corporation to fulfill arrangements with the Corporation's employees in implementing the Secretary's Plan and the distribution of shares from the Corporation's employee stock ownership plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall not be subject to the registration and prospectus delivery requirements of the Securities Act of 1933, any approval requirement under subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code, or the laws of any State with respect to the issuance and sale of securities.".

(13) Section 332(d) of title 49, United States Code, is amended by striking ", the Consolidated Rail Corporation,".

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 301. (a) Conrail's status as a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, shall not be affected by virtue of sale of the interest of the United States in Conrail's common stock. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not alone be the basis of a determination that the acquiring entity has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

(b) The Definitive Agreements shall contain a binding commitment by Norfolk Southern Corporation to continue to operate Conrail in full compliance with the provisions of section 10731(e) of title 49, United States Code.

CONSUMMATION OF SALE

SEC. 302. The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail shall be deemed to be consummated on the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.

CONTRACTS

SEC. 303. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, nothing in this Act shall affect—

(1) Conrail's obligation to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements, in accordance with their terms; and

(2) the obligation of any transferee of divested assets to carry out transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sale agreements to which such assets are subject, in accordance with their terms.

(b) If a divestiture carried out pursuant to the Secretary's Plan precludes Conrail from providing a transportation service for which it has contracted without a right of termination that may be exercised in the event of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the divestiture will result in a change or modification in the movement of the traffic involved, the transferee of the divested rights and properties and Conrail shall provide the contracted-for service on terms and conditions which, to the maximum extent possible, conform to the terms and conditions in the contract.

CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF COMPLIANCE

SEC. 304. The Secretary shall, no later than January 31 of each year, submit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a report setting forth each certificate which Norfolk Southern Corporation and Conrail provided to the Secretary, during the preceding year, certifying compliance with the covenants contained in the Definitive Agreements.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 305. If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstances is held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 306. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b) of this section, the provisions of and amendments made by this Act shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) Sections 108(a), 201 and 202 of this Act shall take effect on the date of consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail.

(c) Any provision of this Act which, pursuant to Article I, Section 7 of the Constitution, provides for raising revenue shall only be effective upon the enactment into law of a bill which has originated in the House of Representatives enacting such provision.

(b) Section 401(a) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C 761(a)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(4) The Secretary shall implement the Secretary's Plan by negotiating, executing, delivering, and performing the Definitive Agreements, which shall conform to the Memorandum of Intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act. The Secretary shall, 45 calendar days before the date on which the Secretary anticipates that the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation will be sold to Norfolk Southern Corporation, transmit to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate and to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives a notification of any alteration from Memorandum of Intent described in sectin 102(20)(A) of this Act which will be made in the Definitive Agreements. After the date of such sale, the Secreatry shall transmit to such Committees notification of any intent to waive compliance with any substantive covenant, agreement or obligation contained in the Definitive Agreements, and the Secretary may not waive such compliance until a period of 45 calendar days has expired after the date of such transmittal.

"(5) The Secretary shall not transfer the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation except concurrently with a divestiture by Norfolk Southern Corporation of rail assets and rights approved by the Attorney General.

"(6) The sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation shall be deemed to be consummated at the date title to the common stock passes to Norfolk Southern Corporation and the United States receives the cash purchase price.".

RAILROAD PURCHASERS AND OFFER FOR SALE OF SHARES TO EMPLOYEES

SEC. 105. Subsections (d) and (e) of section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(d) and (e)) are repealed.

CANCELLATION OF DEBT AND PREFERRED STOCK

SEC. 106. Section 402 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 762) is amended to read as follows:

"DEBT AND PREFERRED STOCK

"SEC. 402. (a) RECAPITALIZATION.—In connection with the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation under section 401 of this Act, and consistent with the Secretary's Plan, the Secretary may take all action necessary to cause the Corporation to be recapitalized such that the interest of the United States, or any agent or instrumentality thereof, and all other commitments or obligations of the Corporation to the United States or any agent or instrumentality thereof arising out of such interest, in any debt (including accrued interest and contingent interest thereon) and preferred stock (including accrued and unpaid dividends thereon) of the Corporation shall be cancelled or retired, and contributed to the capital of the Corporation. The Secretary shall cause the recapitalization authorized by this section to be effective as of the consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation.

"(b) BREACH OF REPRESENTATIONS.—(1) Norfolk Southern Corporation or any successor corporation thereto may bring suit for any breach of representations contained in paragraph 6(e) of the Memorandum of Intent described in section 102(20)(A) of this Act (hereinafter referred to as the 'Representations') in the United States Claims Court or a district court of the United States. If such an action is brought, the Claims Court or district court shall determine the amount by which the United States income tax (including interest and penalties whether or not such penalties are assessed as a tax under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) assessable against the Corporation or against Norfolk Southern Corporation for any year exceeds the amount of such tax which would have been assessable for such year had such Representations not been breached (hereinafter referred to as the 'Offset Amount').

"(2) The Representations shall be considered breached and Norfolk Southern Corporation shall be entitled to bring suit upon the first occurrence of any of the following that is inconsistent with the Representations: (A) the issuance by the Internal Revenue Service of a statutory notice of deficiency (90-day letter), (B) the assessment of the United States income tax, or (C) any claim by the United States in a suit or other judicial proceeding against Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation.

"(3) The right to bring suit pursuant to this section shall not be subject to any waiting period applicable to tax proceedings or to any requirements for payment of any tax as a condition to instituting any suit based on a breach of the Representations.

"(4) Any judgment for money damages relating to breach of the Representations shall only be awarded as an offset in any court or administrative proceeding against the tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation, or both, to which such breach relates; except that if any such tax liability resulting from such breach has been paid, the judgment shall to that extent be an offset against any United States income tax liability of the Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation, or both. If any portion of the tax resulting from a breach of the Representations has been paid, then the Offset Amount shall include interest on such payment from the date paid at the rate from time to time specified in the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for interest payable on refund claims.

"(5) It shall not be a defense to an action brought under this section that Norfolk Southern Corporation knew, or should have known, of the falsity of the Representations or that there exists no carryover basis procedure as contemplated by the last sentence of the Representations.

"(6) For purposes of this section, tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation shall include the tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation and its affiliated group, within the meaning of section 1504 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.".

APPLICABILITY OF CERTAIN LAWS TO SALE OF CONRAIL

SEC. 107. Section 408 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 768) is amended—

Mr. SPECTER (for himself, Mr. DIXON, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. EXON, Mr. MCCONNELL, Mr. SIMON, Mr. ZORINSKY, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, and Mr. PRESSLER) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to the bill S. 638, supra; as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 1558

In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Conrail Public Sale Act of 1985".

FINDINGS

SEC. 2. The Congress finds that—

(1) the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1101 et seq.) provided for an orderly return of Conrail freight service to the private sector;

(2) the provisions of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 were successful in removing Conrail's obligations beyond railroad freight service and in otherwise preparing Conrail for an orderly return to the private sector;

(3) the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association twice found Conrail to be a profitable corporation under section 403 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 763);

(4) Morgan Stanley and Company, Incorporated developed a firm proposal on behalf of a diverse group of private investors to purchase the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and to return Conrail to broad private ownership through one or more public stock offerings;

(5) the sale proposal of the investor group organized by Morgan Stanley and Company, Incorporated best meets the objectives of (A) leaving Conrail in the strongest financial position after the sale, (B) preserving patterns of service to shippers and communities in the region that Conrail now serves by continuing Conrail as an independent railroad, and (C) maximizing the return of the United States on its investment consistent with the objectives set forth in subparagraphs (A) and (B);

(6) the sale proposal of the investor group organized by Morgan Stanley and Company, Incorporated satisfies the requirements of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981, including the intent, goals, and objectives relating to the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail and the requirements of section 401(e) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761(e)); and

(7) amendments to the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 and related laws are needed to permit the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to the investor group organized by Morgan Stanley and Company, Incorporated and to permit cancellation of the interest of the United States in Conrail debt and preferred stock.

PURPOSE

SEC. 3. It is the purpose of the Congress in this Act to return Conrail to the private sector by directing and facilitating the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to the investor group organized by Morgan Stanley and Company, Incorporated.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 4. In this Act, unless the context otherwise requires, the term—

(1) "closing date" means the date that the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail is transferred pursuant to the Purchase Agreements;

(2) "Conrail" means the Consolidated Rail Corporation;

(3) "Purchase Agreements" means the agreements between the Purchasers and the Secretary in the form filed with the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation of the Senate;

(4) "Purchasers" means the investor group organized by Morgan Stanley and Company, Incorporated to purchase the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail as identified in the Shareholders' Agreement;

(5) "Secretary" means the Secretary of Transportation; and

(6) "Shareholders' Agreement" means the agreement among the Purchasers, Conrail and Morgan Stanley and Company, Incorporated in the form filed with the Committee on Commerce, Science and Transportation of the Senate.

IMPLEMENTATION OF SALE

SEC. 104. (a) Section 401 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 761) is amended to read as follows:

"SALE OF THE CORPORATION

"SEC. 401. (a) PURCHASE AGREEMENT.—As soon as practicable, but not later than 10 days following the date of enactment of the Conrail Public Sale Act of 1985, the Secretary shall execute and deliver on behalf of the United State the Purchase Agreements. The Secretary shall transfer the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation to the Purchasers in accordance with such Agreements.

"(b) CONDITIONS OF SALE.—In addition to the terms and conditions of the Purchase Agreements, the transfer of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation shall be subject to, and governed by, the terms and conditions of the Shareholders' Agreement and the Conrail Agreement, which shall be executed concurrently with the Purchase Agreements.

"(c) RAILROAD PURCHASERS.—Any railroad which purchases common stock of the Corporation shall vote such stock in the same proportion as all other common stock of the Corporation is voted unless the Commission determines that such railroad has purchased a controlling interest. As used in this subsection, the term 'railroad' shall include any entity controlling, controlled by, or under common control with any railroad (other than the Corporation or its subsidiaries).

"(d) ANTI-TAKEOVER RESTRICTION.—Except as may be provided in the Purchase Agreements with respect to the initial allocation of shares among the Purchasers, no person (with the exception of the ESOP), affiliated group of persons, of group of persons acting in concert may, for a period of five years beginning on the closing date, hold or acquire more than 10 per centum of the outstanding shares of any class of the voting stock of the Corporation.".

"Sec. 401. Sale of the Corporation.".

CANCELLATION OF DEBT AND PREFERRED STOCK

SEC. 105. Section 402 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 762) is amended to read as follows:

"DEBT AND PREFERRED STOCK

"SEC. 402. (a) RECAPITALIZATION.—In connection with the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation under section 401, and consistent with the Purchase Agreements, the Secretary shall take such action as may be necessary to cause the corporation to be recapitalized to assure that the interest of the United States, or any agent or instrumentality thereof, and all other commitments or obligations of the Corporation to the United States or any agent or instrumentality thereof arising out of such interest, in any debt (including accrued interest and contingent interest thereon) and preferred stock (including accrued and unpaid dividends thereon) of the Corporation shall be canceled or retired and contributed to the capital of the Corporation. The Secretary shall cause the recapitalization authorized by this section to be effective as of the closing date.

"(b) EFFECT.—For purposes of regulation by the Commission and State public utility regulation, the recapitalization authorized by this section, the sale of the interest of the Untied States in the common stock of the Corporation, and the value of the consideration received therefor by the United States shall not reduce the Corporation's investment net of depreciation in any of its assets and shall not affect the calculation of the Corporation's stock or asset values, expenses, costs, returns, profits, or revenues, or otherwise affect or be the basis for a change in the regulation of any railroad service, rate, or practice of the Corporation, including any service, rate or practice provided or established by the Corporation in connection with other carriers,".

PUBLIC INTEREST COVENANTS

SEC. 106. (a) Section 404 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 764) is amended to read as follows:

"PUBLIC INTEREST COVENANTS

"SEC. 404. (a) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section, the term—

"(1) 'affiliate' means, with respect to any person, any other person directly or indirectly controlling, controlled by, or under common control with, such person (for which purpose the term 'control' when used with respect to any person means the possession, directly or indirectly, of power to direct or cause the direction of the management and policies of such person) and, without limiting the generality of the foregoing, includes any officer of such person or of any affiliate of such person;

"(2) 'capital expenditures' means all amounts expended by the Corporation and its subsidiaries for replacement or rehabilitation of, or enhancements to, the railroad plant, property, trackage, and equipment of the Corporation and its subsidiaries, all as determined in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles: Provided, however, That no amount spent upon normal repair, maintenance and upkeep of such railroad plant, property, trackage, and equipment in the ordinary course of business shall constitute capital expenditures;

"(3) 'cumulative net income' means, for any period, the net income of the Corporation and its consolidated subsidiaries (after provision for income taxes) properly attributable to the conduct of the business of the Corporation and its consolidated subsidiaries before provision for any preferred stock payments;

"(4) 'debt' means (A) indebtedness, whether or not represented by bonds, debentures, notes, or other securities, for the repayment of money borrowed, (B) all deferred indebtedness for the payment of the purchase price of property or assets purchased, (C) all guaranties, endorsements, assumptions, and other contingent obligations in respect of, or to purchase or to otherwise acquire, indebtedness of others, and (D) all indebtedness secured by any mortgage pledge or lien existing on property owned, subject to such mortgage pledge or lien, whether or not indebtedness secured thereby shall have been assumed;

"(5) 'net additional debt' means, at any time, an amount equal to the difference between the Corporation's consolidated debt outstanding at such time and its consolidated debt outstanding immediately after the closing date;

"(6) 'net additional preferred stock' means, at any time, an amount equal to the fair market value of the consideration received by the Corporation for the issuance of outstanding preferred stock issued subsequent to the closing date;

"(7) 'non-required capital expenditures' means the amount, if any, by which capital expenditures for any fiscal year exceeds the greater of (A) an amount equal to depreciation of the Corporation for financial reporting purposes for such year or (B) $500,000,000;

"(8) 'person' means an individual, corporation, partnership, association, trust, or other entity or organization, including a government or political subdivision thereof or a governmental body;

"(9) 'preferred stock' means any class or series of preferred stock, and any class or series of common stock having liquidation and dividend rights and preferences superior to the common stock acquired by the Purchasers from the Secretary on the closing date; and

"(10) 'subsidiary' means any corporation more than 50 per centum of whose outstanding voting securities are directly or indirectly owned by the Corporation.

"(b) AFFIRMATIVE COVENANTS.—During a period of five years commencing on the closing date:

"(1) The Corporation shall furnish to the Secretary its audited consolidated financial statements within 90 days after the end of each fiscal year of the Corporation and its unaudited interim financial statements within 45 days after the end of each quarter (except the fourth quarter). Such interim financial statements shall have received such limited review by the Corporation's independent certified public accountants as such accountants normally accord to interim financial statements of publicly held companies.

"(2) The Corporation and each railroad subsidiary shall continue in the railroad business substantially as such business was being conducted by the Corporation as of February 8, 1985, and such railroad subsidiary and (subject to permitted abandonments and service alterations in accordance with applicable law and the normal procedures and regulations of the Commission) to maintain rail freight services throughout its system that are economically justifiable: Provided, however, That expedited abandonment proceedings commenced pursuant to section 308 of this Act before the closing date may be continued, but no new filings of notices of insufficient revenues may be made pursuant to such section. The Corporation shall maintain its corporate existence and its material licenses and franchises.

"(3) Notwithstanding any repeal of section 308 of this Act, the Corporation shall continue its practice of offering any line for which an abandonment certificate is issued by the Commission to a purchaser who agrees to provide interconnecting rail service. Such offer shall last for the 120-day period following the date of issuance of the abandonment certificate and the price for such abandoned line shall be equal to 75 per centum of net liquidation value as determined by the Commission.

"(4) The Corporation and each of its subsidiaries shall maintain, preserve, protect, and keep their respective properties in good repair, working order, and condition, and shall not permit deferred maintenance, in order to provide and maintain rail service as required by paragraph (2) of this subsection.

"(5) The Corporation and each of its subsidiaries shall maintain insurance against loss or damage of the kinds customarily insured against by corporations similarly situated.

"(6) The Corporation shall spend in each fiscal year the greater of (A) an amount equal to the Corporation's depreciation for financial reporting purposes for such year or (B) $500,000,000, in capital expenditures: Provided, however, That in any year, the Corporation's Board of Directors may reduce the required capital expenditures for such year to an amount which the Board determines is justified by prudent business and engineering practices: And further provided, That in any event, the Corporation's cumulative capital expenditures subsequent to the closing date shall not be less than: $350,000,000 on the first anniversary of the closing date, $700,000,000 on the second anniversary of the closing date, $1,050,000,000 on the third anniversary of the closing date, $1,400,000,000 on the fourth anniversary of the closing date, and $1,750,000,000 on the fifth anniversary of the closing date.

"(7) The Corporation and each of its subsidiaries shall pay all debt promptly when due and payable.

"(8) The Corporation and each of its subsidiaries shall keep proper books and records in which full, true, and correct entires of all transactions will be made in accordance with generally accepted accounting principales (as applicable to companies subject to the reporting requirements of the Securities Exchange Act of 1934) applied on a consistent basis.

"(9) The Corporation shall continue to operate from its headquarter in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, and to retain its locomotive shop and car repair shop in Altoona, Pennsylvania;

"(10) The Corporation shall continue to maintain or reestablish, with the small eastern rail carriers of less than $300,000,000 annual operating revenues, reasonably efficient routes of major importance at the request of any such rail carriers.

"(11) The Corporation shall continue its affirmative action program, including its minority vendor program, substantially as such program was being conducted by the Corporation as of February 8, 1985, subject to any provisions of applicable law.

"(12)(A) Within 45 days after the close of each fiscal quarter of the Corporation and promptly following the declaration of any common or preferred stock payment described in paragraph (5) or (6) of subsection (c) of this section by the Board of Directors of the Corporation, but not later than 10 days before making such payment, the Corporation shall deliver to the Secretary a certificate executed by an executive officer or representative of the Corporation which shall (i) certify that as of such date, and, in the case of any such certificate delivered in connection with such payment, after giving effect thereto, the Corporation shall have complied, and, after giving effect to such payment, shall then be in compliance with, all of the covenants set forth in this section and that no default exists, or after giving effect to such payment, would exist, with respect to any such covenant, and (ii) set forth all computations necessary to evidence compliance with all of the covenants set forth in this section at the date of such certificate, and in the case of any such certificate delivered in connection with such payment on a pro forma basis after giving effect to such payment.

"(B) The Secretary shall, not later than January 31 of each year, submit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate a reporting listing the certificates required under subparagraph (A) that were submitted by the Corporation during the preceding calendar year.

"(13) The Corporation shall give prompt notice to the Secretary and to each of the signatories to the Shareholder's Agreement of any default under way of the covenants set forth in subsection (b) or (c) of this section.

"(c) NEGATIVE COVENANTS.—During a period of 5 years commencing on the closing date:

"(1) The Corporation shall not, absent insolvency, liquidate, wind-up, dissolve, or file for voluntary reorganization under title 11 of the United States Code or any other law relating to bankruptcy, insolvency, or relief of debtors.

"(2) The Corporation shall not permit to occur any transaction or series of transactions (other than in the ordinary course of business of the Corporation and its subsidiaries) whereby all or any substantial part of the railroad assets and business of the Corporation and its subsidiaries taken as a whole are sold, leased, transferred, or otherwise disposed of to any corporation or entity other than to a wholly-owned subsidiary of the Corporation.

"(3) The Corporation shall not merge or consolidate with or into any corporation or any other entity. The Corporation shall not permit any subsidiary to merge or consolidate with or into any other entity unless, after giving effect to such merger or consolidation—

"(A) the Corporation shall be fully in compliance with all of the convenants enumerated in this section;

"(B) all of the covenants enumerated in this section shall continue to apply to the surviving or resulting entity of such merger or consolidation fully and to the same extent as they applied to the Corporation or to its subsidiaries (as the case may be) immediately prior to such merger or consolidation; and

"(C) such merger or consolidation shall not have violated any of the provisions of paragraph (8) of this subsection.

"(4) In connection with the financing of the purchase price of the common stock of the Corporation sold pursuant to the purchase agreements, (A) the Corporation shall not use its cash or cash equivalents on hand, other than in connection with the transactions which employees contemplated by such agreement and (B) the Corporation shall not subject its or its subsidiaries' assets to any pledge, lien, mortgage, or other security interest.

"(5)(A) Except as otherwise provided under subparagraph (B), the Corporation shall not at any time, in respect of any shares of any class or series of the common stock of the Corporation—

"(i) declare or pay any dividends in cash, property, or other assets (other than dividends payable solely in shares of any class or series of the common stock of the Corporation) thereon;

"(ii) apply any of its property or assets to the purchase, redemption, or other acquisition or retirement thereof;

"(iii) set apart any sum for the purchase, redemption, or other acquisition or retirement thereof, or

"(iv) make any other distribution, by reduction of capital or otherwise.

Any action described in clause (i), (ii), (iii), or (iv) with respect to the Corporation's common stock is hereinafter in this section referred to as a common stock payment.

"(B) No such common stock payment shall be made except to the extent that each of the conditions set forth below shall have been satisfied:

"(i) Such common stock payment is entirely in cash and the Corporation shall, after giving effect to such common stock payment, be fully in compliance with all of the covenants enumerated in this section.

"(ii) Immediately after giving effect to such common stock payment, the cumulative amount of all common stock payments made subsequent to the closing date shall not exceed (I) 40 per centum of the cumulative net income of the Corporation accrued subsequent to the closing date minus (II) the cumulative amount of all preferred stock payments (as defined in paragraph (6) of this subsection) made subsequent to the closing date.

"(iii) Immediately after giving effect to such common stock payment, the Corporation shall have cash and cash equivalents on hand at such time not less than the greater of: (I) $500,000,000, or (II) the sum of $500,000,000, net additional debt, and net additional preferred stock (the 'formula'): Provided, however, that the formula shall be reduced by an amount equal to cumulative nonrequired capital expenditures made by the Corporation subsequent to the closing date.

"(6)(A) Except as provided under paragraph (B), the Corporation shall not in respect of any shares of any class or series of preferred stock of the Corporation—

"(i) declare or pay any dividends in cash, property, or other assets thereon;

"(ii) apply any of its property or assets to the purchase, redemption, or other acquisition or retirement thereof;

"(iii) set apart any sum for the purchase, redemption, or other acquisition or retirement thereof; or

"(iv) make any other distribution, by reduction of capital or otherwise.

Any action described in clause (i), (ii), (iii), or (iv) with respect to the Corporation's preferred stock is hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as a 'preferred stock payment'.

"(B) No such preferred stock payment shall be made except to the extent that each of the conditions set forth below shall have been satisfied:

"(i) Such preferred stock payment is entirely in cash and the Corporation shall, after giving effect to such preferred stock payment, be fully in compliance with all of the covenants enumerated in paragraphs (6) and (7) of subsection (b), and paragraphs (2), (3), (5), and (6) of subsection (c), of this section.

"(ii) Immediately after giving effect to such preferred stock payment, the cumulative amount of all common stock payments and all preferred stock payments made subsequent to the closing date shall not exceed the cumulative net income of the Corporation accrued subsequent to the closing date.

"(iii) Immediately after giving effect to such preferred stock payment, the Corporation shall have cash and cash equivalents on hand at such time not less than $500,000,000.

"(7) Notwithstanding paragraph (5) of this subsection, if the Corporation is in default in making capital expenditures pursuant to subsection (b)(6) of this section, common stock payments may not be made until the Corporation is again in compliance with such subsection (b)(6).

"(8)(A) The Corporation shall, and shall permit its subsidiaries to, enter into transactions with the Purchasers and their affiliates only if such transactions are (i) in the aggregate fair to the Corporation and its subsidiaries, and (ii) similar in kind and nature to, and documented, recorded, and accounted for in the same manner as, transactions between the Corporation and other persons not affiliated with the Corporation or with any of the Purchasers.

"(B) Except in the implementation of the transactions contemplated by the Conrail Sale Agreements, the Corporation and its subsidiaries shall not engage in any of the following transactions with any Purchaser or its affiliates;

"(i) transfer, by merger, assumption, or otherwise, of any obligation of any Purchaser or its affiliates to the Corporation or any subsidiary in an amount greater than the value of the transferee of such merger, assumption, or other transaction;

"(ii) loans or advances by the Corporation or any subsidiary to any Purchaser or its affiliates; purchases or other acquisitions by the Corporation or any subsidiary of any capital stock, obligations, or securities of any Purchaser or its affiliates; capital contributions to or investments in or guarantees of any debt or obligation of any Purchaser or its affiliates by the Corporation or any subsidiary; and

"(iii) assignments of any right to receive income for a consideration of less value than such right by the Corporation or any subsidiary to any Purchaser or its affiliates.

"(C) Nothing in this paragraph shall prohibit transactions between the Corporation and any of its subsidiaries or among any of such subsidiaries.

"(9) In no event shall the Corporation obtain a reversion of any excess assets held in the trust or a successor trust maintained with the Corporation's supplemental pension plan or any successor plan. The Corporation shall not terminate its supplemental pension plan.

"(10) The Corporation shall not amend, modify, rescind, or revoke any provision of the Corporation's restated articles of incorporation relating to the relative rights, preferences, and limitations of any series or class of capital stock of the Corporation held by the Purchasers immediately after the closing date.

"(d) ACCOUNTING TERMS AND DETERMINATIONS.—(1) Unless otherwise specified in this section, all accounting terms used in this section shall be interpreted, all accounting determinations shall be made, and all financial statements required to be delivered shall be prepared, in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles as in effect from time to time in the United States, applied on a basis consistent (except for changes approved by the Corporation's independent public accountants) with the most recent audited consolidated financial statements of the Corporation.

"(2) For the purpose of calculations under paragraphs (5) and (6) of subsection (c), the transactions by which the Purchasers assumed ownership of the Corporation's common stock shall be accounted for as a recapitalization of the Corporation with a 100 per centum revaluation of the Corporation's assets and liabilities based on the fair value of the new capital structure.

"(e) ADMINISTRATION.—(1) The Secretary may, upon application by the Corporation, waive (in whole or in part) any provision of this section if the Secretary determines in writing that such waiver would not impair continued rail service by the Corporation and its railroad subsidiaries or result in a material reduction in the financial strength of the Corporation and its subsidiaries taken as a whole.

"(2) The Secretary shall transmit to the Committee on Energy and Commerce of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation of the Senate any determination under paragraph (1).

"(3) No waiver shall be effective under this subsection until after the expiration of 45 calendar days after the transmittal required by paragraph (2).".

(b) The item in the table of contents of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 relating to section 404 is amended to read as follows:

"Sec. 404. Public interest covenants.".

EFFECT OF REPEALS

SEC. 203. All repeals under this Act of provisions authorizing the appropriation of funds are made without prejudice to the continued availability of funds appropriated under such provisions before the effective date of such repeal.

TITLE III—REVENUE PROVISIONS

TAX TREATMENT

SEC. 301. (a) GENERAL RULE.—Except as provided in subsection (b), nothing in this title (or in any amendment made by this title) shall affect the Federal tax treatment of Conrail (or of any affiliated group of which it is a member).

(b) MODIFICATION AND CLARIFICATION OF TAX TREATMENT.—For purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954—

(1) CONRAIL CARRYFORWARDS MAY NOT BE CARRIED FORWARD.—No Conrail net operating loss, capital loss, or credit under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 attributable to any period before the closing date may be carried forward to any period after the closing date.

(2) NO INCOME FROM CANCELLATION OF DEBT OR PREFERRED STOCK.—No amount shall be included in the gross income of any person (and no basis adjustment in the assets of Conrail shall be made) by reason of any cancellation of any obligation (or preferred stock) of Conrail in connection with the Conrail Sale Agreements.

(3) ADJUSTED BASIS.—The adjusted basis of Conrail's assets shall not be increased by any adjustment relating to any period prior to the closing date.

(4) EARNINGS AND PROFITS.—For purposes of section 316 of the Internal Revenue Act of 1954, Conrail shall be deemed to have accumulated earnings and profits of $500,000,000 as of the closing date.

(5) WAIVER OF CERTAIN EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLAN PROVISIONS.—For purposes of determining whether the employee stock ownership plans of Conrail meet the qualifications of sections 401 and 501 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 the limits of section 415 of such Code (relating to limitations on benefits and contributions under qualified plans) shall not apply with respect to interests in stock transferred pursuant to a law heretofore enacted.

(6) TAXABLE YEAR OF CONRAIL.—The taxable year of Conrail shall close as of the closing date.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 302. For purposes of this title—

(1) CONRAIL.—The term "Conrail" includes any corporation which was a subsidiary of Conrail immediately before the closing date.

(2) CONRAIL SALE AGREEMENTS.—The term "Conrail Sale Agreements" has the same meaning such term is given in paragraph (4B) of section 102 of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973, and includes all representations and warranties made in such agreements, entered into to implement this Act.

TITLE IV—MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

COMMON CARRIER STATUS OF CONRAIL AFTER SALE

SEC. 401. Conrail shall be a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code, notwithstanding this Act. Purchase of Conrail stock shall not be the sole basis of a determination that any Purchaser has become a common carrier by railroad under section 10102(4) of title 49, United States Code.

SEPARABILITY

SEC. 402. If any provision of this Act or the application thereof to any person or circumstance is held invalid, the remainder of this Act and the application of such provision to other persons or circumstances shall not be affected thereby.

EFFECT ON CONTRACTS

SEC. 403. Nothing in this Act shall affect any obligation of Conrail to carry out its transportation contracts and equipment leases, equipment trusts, and conditional sales agreements, in accordance with their terms.

EFFECTIVE DATES

SEC. 404. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b), the provisions of this Act, and amendments made by such provisions, shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) Sections 108, 201, and 202 of this Act shall take effect on the closing date, except that subsection (a) of each of sections 201 and 202 shall take effect on the date of enactment of this Act.

(c) Any provision of this Act which, pursuant to Article I, Section 7 of the Constitution, provides for raising revenue shall only be effective upon the enactment into law of a bill which has originated in the House of Representatives enacting such provision.

LONG AMENDMENT NO. 1559

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. LONG submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to amendment No. 1437 proposed by Mr. DANFORTH to the bill S. 638, supra; as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 1559

On page 22, strike all from line 2 through line 19 on page 24, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

RESPONSIBILITY OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLAN FIDUCIARIES

SEC. 131. (a) Section 216(f)(8)(A) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)(8)(A)) is amended—

(1) by striking "or" at the end of clause (ii);

(2) by striking the period at the end of clause (iii) and inserting in lieu therof "; or"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following clause:

"(iv) for or in connection with any action taken to implement the Secretary's Plan or the valuation and payment procedures set forth in paragraph (13) of this subsection, including any sale, exchange, valuation, or disposition of plan and related trust assets or the assets of ConRail Equity Corporation and any determination of the terms on which any such sale, exchange, valuation, or disposition is effected.".

(b) Section 218(f)(8)(C) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)(8)(C)) is amended—

(1) by inserting "Norfolk Southern Corporation," immediately after "the Association," in clause (i); and

(2) by inserting ", of Norfolk Southern Corporation" immediately after "Association" in clause (ii).

INDEMNITY OBLIGATION

SEC. 132. Section 216(f)(9) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)(9)) is amended by inserting ", other than Norfolk Southern Corporation, its directors, officers, employees and agents, and any of their successors and assigns," immediately after "(8)(C) of this subsection".

QUALIFICATION, REVIEW, AND EVALUATION OF EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS

SEC. 133. Section 216(f) of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 (45 U.S.C. 726(f)) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following paragraphs:

"(11)(A) The employee stock ownership plans of the Corporation and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall not be deemed to fail to satisfy the qualification requirements of sections 401 and 501 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 merely because (i) contributions and allocations with respect to such plans may not meet the requirements of section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, (ii) participants in such plans may be entitled to withdraw all or part of the amounts allocated to their accounts prior to the expiration of the period generally imposed by the Internal Revenue Service for for qualified plans, and (iii) distributions and withdrawals from such plans may be required to be made in cash, rather than in shares of stock.

"(B) The qualification deemed under subparagraph (A) of this paragraph shall relate only to contributions, allocations, withdrawals, and distributions that fulfill arrangements with or for the Corporation's employees in implementing the Secretary's Plan. All contributions and allocations provided for in such arrangements shall in no event be treated as exceeding the maximum annual addition permitted under section 415 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (but not for purposes of applying section 404(j) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) for purposes of calculating any limitation under section 415 with respect to contributions, allocations, and benefits not described in the Secretary's Plan, including contributions, allocations, and benefits under any other employee benefit plans and related trusts of the Corporation and any affiliated corporation.

"(C) The continued compliance of the employee benefit plans of the Corporation and any affiliated corporation and any related trust with the qualification requirements of the Internal Revenue Code with respect to all contributions, allocations, withdrawals, and distributions that do not fulfill arrangements with or for the Corporation's employees in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall be subject to all provisions of existing law, as amended from time to time. Nothing in this paragraph or in paragraphs (12) and (13) of this subsection shall be construed to permit the transfer of assets from any employee benefit plan subject to the qualification requirements of the Internal Revenue Code to any other plan or the Corporation or any affiliated corporation without full compliance with all applicable requirements of existing law, as amended from time to time. No inference shall be drawn from this paragraph or paragraphs (12) or (13) of this subsection as to whether an amount is a contribution deductible under section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 or a nondeductible capital expenditure.

"(12) Except as provided in section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105), the issuance and sale or contribution of securities by Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation for the benefit of the Corporation's employees as part of arrangements to implement the Secretary's Plan and the distribution of shares from the Corporation's employee stock ownership plans and related trusts maintained, amended, or adopted in implementing the Secretary's Plan shall not be subject to the registration and prospectus delivery requirements of the Securities Act of 1933, any approval requirement under subtitle IV of title 49, United States Code, or the laws of any State with respect to the issuance and sale of securities.

"(13)(A) Effective upon consummation of the sale of all of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation, the Consolidated Rail Corporation Employee Stock Ownership Plan (hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as the 'ESOP') shall be amended—

"(i) to provide that the amount that would otherwise be contributed to the ESOP for the then current Plan Year (as such term is defined in the ESOP) shall be adjusted in proportion to the ratio of the number of full calendar months in the Plan Year before the consummation of the sale to twelve months;

"(ii) to provide for the contribution to the ESOP immediately following the sale (if not already made) of all shares of ConRail Equity Corporation's preferred stock representing the contribution for the then current Plan Year (as adjusted in accordance with clause (i)) and all prior Plan Years;

"(iii) to permit no additional contributions to the ESOP other than the contributions referred to in clause (ii);

"(iv) to provide that the contribution for the then current Plan Year (as adjusted in accordance with clause (i)) shall be allocated among participants as of the date on which the sale is consummated based on the hours of service of such participants as of such date and that, for purposes of such allocation, the 1,000 hours-of-service requirement with respect to the then current Plan Year shall be adjusted in proportion to the ratio of the number of full calendar months in the Plan Year before the consummation of the sale to twelve months;

"(v) to terminate and extinguish any and all rights of the ESOP and its beneficiaries in respect of shares of the Corporation's common stock held by ConRail Equity Corporation (which shares may then be cancelled by the Corporation) and in respect of future contributions of ConRail Equity Corporation's preferred stock; and

"(vi) to provide for the withdrawal of each participant's account balance in the ESOP as soon as practicable after such account is reduced to cash or securities pursuant to subparagraph (B) of this paragraph.

"(B)(i) Each present and former participant in the ESOP and each designated beneficiary of a deceased participant in the ESOP having shares of ConRail Equity Corporation's preferred stock allocated to his account pursuant to the ESOP (hereinafter in this paragraph referred to as the 'vested participant') shall be provided by the Corporation or Norfolk Southern Corporation with notice as promptly as possible, but in no event later than sixty days following the effective date of the Conrail Sale Amendments Act of 1985, that each vested participant must irrevocably elect, before or within forty-five days after the date the sale is consummated, either the payment alternative (as described in clause (ii)) or the appraisal alternative (as described in clause (iii)).

"(ii) Upon a valid election of the payment alternative by a vested participant and upon consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation, (I) such vested participant's ESOP account shall be credited with an amount equal to $48.00 per share of ConRail Equity Corporation preferred stock allocated to his account, which amount shall be paid in cash (or Norfolk Southern Corporation common stock of equivalent value pursuant to clause (iv)) to ConRail Equity Corporation by Norfolk Southern Corporation or the Corporation from funds committed by them for the benefit of the Corporation's employees as part of arrangements to implement the Secretary's Plan, deposited by ConRail Equity Corporation in the ESOP, and distributed in accordance with the terms of the ESOP as amended pursuant to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph; (II) Norfolk Southern Corporation shall offer to employees electing the payment alternative the option of receiving Norfolk Southern Corporation common stock of equivalent value (valued at its closing price on the date the sale is consummated) and, as to employees so electing, such stock plus cash for any fractional rights shall be credited, paid in, deposited, and distributed as provided in this clause in lieu of cash; and (III) the shares of ConRail Equity Corporation preferred stock in such vested participant's account shall be transferred by the ESOP to ConRail Equity Corporation for cancellation.

"(iii) Upon election of the appraisal alternative by a vested participant and upon consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation, (I) the shares of ConRail Equity Corporation preferred stock allocated to such vested participant's account under the ESOP shall be transferred by the ESOP to ConRail Equity Corporation and cancelled; (II) the fair value of the shares of ConRail Equity Corporation preferred stock allocated to such vested participant's account under the ESOP together with all other rights, if any, of such vested participant under the ESOP shall be determined pursuant to subparagraph (C) of this paragraph by the special court established under section 209 of this Act; (III) such fair value (together with interest accrued from the date of sale to the date of payment and calculated at the rate in effect under section 6621(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 on the date the sale is consummated; plus any dividends) shall be paid to the ESOP from funds committed by the Corporation or Norfolk Southern Corporation for the benefit of the Corporation's employees as part of arrangements to implement the Secretary's Plan, plus interest and dividends accrued thereon from the date of the sale; (IV) the United States shall not be liable to any vested participant for any part of such fair value or accrued interest; and (V) such fair value and accrued interest shall be allocated to such vested participant's account under the ESOP in cash and distributed in accordance with the terms of ESOP, as amended pursuant to subparagraph (A) of this paragraph.

"(iv) The notice given to each vested participant shall include, among other things, statements indicating that the election to be made is irrevocable, that vested participants who elect the appraisal alternative must bear the costs of the valuation proceeding and their own legal expenses, and that, under the appraisal alternative, the fair value of each share of ConRail Equity Corporation preferred stock and all other rights (if any) under the ESOP will be determined by the special court taking into account the factors set forth in subparagraph (D) of this paragraph and such value may be more or less than $48.00 per share and may, in fact, be determined to be zero.

"(v) In the event neither the payment alternative nor the appraisal alternative is elected by a vested participant for any reason, such vested participant shall be deemed to have elected the payment alternative.

"(C)(i) Exclusive jurisdiction to hear all cases concerning appraisal of the ESOP shall be in the special court, and all such cases shall be considered by the special court on an expedited basis.

"(ii) Immediately following expiration of the forty-five-day election period set forth in the notice required by subparagraph (B)(i) of this paragraph, if any vested participant shall have elected the appraisal alternative, the Corporation shall commence an action in the special court to determine the fair value, as of the date immediately preceding the date of consummation of the sale, of the preferred stock of ConRail Equity Corporation allocated to such vested participant's account in the ESOP (including any shares contributed in accordance with subparagraph (A)(ii) of this paragraph) together with all other rights, if any, of such vested participant under the ESOP.

"(iii) The special court shall give notice of the time and place fixed for the hearing of such appraisal proceeding, in a form to be approved by the special court, to the Corporation, Norfolk Southern Corporation and each vested participant who has elected the appraisal alternative, affording them the opportunity to present evidence on the appropriate valuation in the proceeding instituted pursuant to clause (ii) of this subparagraph.

"(iv) As provided in section 209(e)(3) of this Act (45 U.S.C. 719(e)(3)), the final judgment of the special court shall be reviewable only upon petition for a writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of the United States.

"(v) Subject to review as provided in clause (iv) of this subparagraph, a final judgment in the proceeding instituted pursuant to clause (ii) of this subparagraph shall be binding upon all parties with an interest in the ESOP.

"(vi) Court costs of the appraisal proceeding commenced pursuant to clause (ii) of this subparagraph, including the fees and expenses of experts appointed by the special court, shall be borne by the vested participants who elect the appraisal alternative in proportion to the shares of ConRail Equity Corporation preferred stock allocated to their accounts under the ESOP or in such other proportion as the special court shall determine. Vested participants who elect the appraisal alternative shall bear their own legal expenses and any other expenses that they may incur in connection with the appraisal alternative.

"(D) The value of the preferred stock of ConRail Equity Corporation allocated to each vested participant's account in the ESOP shall be based upon the following factors:

"(i) the fair market value of the common stock of the Corporation on a going-concern basis, as determined by (I) the purchase price paid by Norfolk Southern Corporation, including the $1.2 billion cash purchase price, the net present value to the Corporation of the surrender of the Corporation's net operating loss carryforwards and other carryforwards (including investment tax credit carryforwards), and any excess cash (as defined in the Secretary's Plan), as consideration for all of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation after cancellation of any debt of the Corporation (including accrued interest and contingent interest thereon) and preferred stock of the Corporation (including accrued and unpaid dividends thereon) owned by the United States or any agent or instrumentality thereof, and (II) a comparison of the historic and projected earnings of the Corporation (as adjusted to reflect its return to the private sector) with other companies engaged in the railroad business, but such determination shall not consider the effect, if any, of the restrictive covenants contained in the Secretary's Plan; and

"(ii) adjustments to the fair market value of the common stock of the Corporation as determined in accordance with clause (i) of this subparagraph, consisting of excluding the benefit of the cancellation of any debt of the Corporation (including accrued interest and contingent interest thereon) and preferred stock of the Corporation (including accrued and unpaid dividends thereon) owned by the United States or any agent or instrumentality thereof, and applying a discount rate equal to the applicable Federal rate, as determined under section 1274(d) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 for an obligation issued as of the consummation of the sale and due January 1, 1991 (the date on which the vested participants' account balances in the ESOP would otherwise have been distributed), for purposes of determining the present value of the preferred stock's right to be exchanged for the common stock of the Corporation.".

EFFECTIVE DATE OF REVENUE RAISING PROVISIONS

SEC. 134. Any provision of any amendment made by this subtitle which, pursuant to article I, Section 7 of the Constitution, provides for raising revenue shall only be effective upon the enactment into law of a bill which has originated in the House of Representatives enacting such provision.

HEINZ AMENDMENT NOS. 1560 THROUGH 1565

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. HEINZ submitted six amendments intended to be proposed by him to the bill S. 638, supra; as follows:

AMENDMENT NO. 1560

On page 4, line 14, insert after "paragraph (4)(A)" the following: "except that such term shall not include any agreements unless there is a binding and restrictive agreement with Norfolk Southern Corporation that—

"(A) such Corporation's ability to utilize Conrail's built-in losses (determined presumptively by an allocation among Conrail's tangible and intangible assets of the cash price paid for the Conrail stock, plus remaining Conrail liabilities, less Conrail cash, marketable securities, inventory, and the value of its excess pension assets) shall be restricted in a manner consistent with existing Federal tax law and regulations and with the Secretary's understanding that Norfolk Southern Corporation shall abide by, and remain subject to, the limitations set forth in Income Tax Regulations section 1.1502-15 and other related provisions of the Federal Income Tax Regulations, and

"(B) such Corporation will not directly or indirectly utilize Conrail's built-in losses by any means or through any device or method (including, but not limited to, stock or property transfers, or other capital or operating arrangements, having the effect of shifting taxable income to Conrail) having the effect of reducing the Federal tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation's affiliated group (other than Conrail and its existing subsidiaries).".

AMENDMENT No. 1561

At the appropriate place, insert the following: "except that the term 'definitive agreements' shall not include any agreements unless there is a binding and restrictive agreement with Norfolk Southern Corporation that—

"(A) such Corporation's ability to utilize Conrail's built-in losses (determined presumptively by an allocation among Conrail's tangible and intangible assets of the cash price for the Conrail stock, plus remaining Conrail liabilities, less Conrail cash, marketable securities, inventory, and the value of its excess pension assets) shall be restricted in a manner consistent with existing Federal tax law and regulations and with the Secretary's understanding that Norfolk Southern Corporation shall abide by, and remain subject to, the limitations set forth in Income Tax Regulations section 1.1502-15 and other related provisions of the Federal Income Tax Regulations, and

On page 6, line 9, insert after "paragraph (9)(A)" the following: "except that such term shall not include any agreements unless there is a binding and restrictive agreement with Norfolk Southern Corporation that—

"(A) such Corporation's ability to utilize Conrail's built-in losses (determined presumptively by an allocation among Conrail's tangible and intangible assets of the cash price paid for the Conrail stock, plus remaining Conrail liabilities, less Conrail cash, marketable securities, inventory, and the value of its excess pension assets) shall be restricted in a manner consistent with existing Federal tax law and regulations and with the Secretary's understanding that Norfolk Southern Corporation shall abide by, and remain subject to, the limitations set forth in Income Tax Regulations, section 1.1502-15 and other related provisions of the Federal Income Tax Regulations, and

"(B) such Corporation will not directly or indirectly utilize Conrail's built-n losses by any means or through any device or method (including, but not limited to, stock or property transfers, or other capital or operating arrangements, having the effect of shifting taxable income to Conrail) having the effect of reducing the Federal tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation's affiliated group (other than Conrail and its existing subsidiaries).".

AMENDMENT No. 1563

On page 31, between lines 16 and 17, insert the following new section:

CLARIFICATION OF TAX TREATMENT

SEC. 305. (a) For purposes of applying the consolidated return regulations of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and other provisions of such Code relating to such regulations—

(1) the fair market value of any asset of Conrail as of the sale date shall not exceed the allocable adjusted purchase price of such asset,

(2) the built-in deductions of Conrail for any taxable year ending after the sale date shall include (but not be limited to) the amounts described in subsection (b), and

(3) the computation of income or loss of Conrail for any taxable year ending after the sale date shall be subject to the provisions of subsection (c).

(b) The following amounts shall be treated as built-in deductions for purposes of subsection (a)(2):

(1) That portion of the amount allowable as a deduction for depreciation or amortization for any taxable year with respect to any asset held by Conrail immediately before the sale date which bears the same ratio to the total amount so allowable as—

(A) the adjusted basis of such asset as of the sale date, reduced by the allocable adjusted purchase price of such asset, bears to

(B) the adjusted basis of such asset as of the sale date.

(2) The excess (if any) of—

(A) any deduction for accrued rent under any safe-harbor lease agreement to which the provisions of section 168(f)(8) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (as in effect before the amendments made by the Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act of 1982) apply, over

(B) any interest income under such agreement.

(3)(A) Any deduction for any amount paid to any current or former employee of Conrail with respect to any claim for additional compensation for services performed before the sale date.

(B) Subparagraph (A) shall not apply if Norfolk Southern Corporation agrees, at such time and in such manner as the Secretary may prescribe, to pay to current or former employees of Conrail the amount of any reduction in the Federal income tax liability of Conrail or Norfolk Southern Corporation which would result if subparagraph (A) did not apply.

(c)(1) For purposes of subsection (a)(3), income or loss of Conrail for any taxable year ending after the sale date shall be computed without regard to any of the following amounts:

(A) In the case of any transaction between Conrail and Norfolk Southern Corporation—

(i) any increase in the amount paid by Norfolk Southern Corporation to Conrail, or

(ii) any decrease in the amount paid by Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation, when compared with the amount so paid for such transaction (or a similar transaction) on the sale date. For purposes of the preceding sentence, the amount paid on the sale date shall be adjusted for any increase or decrease in the amount charged directly (or indirectly through rates) to an unrelated person for any similar transaction.

(B) Any net income attributable to property transferred to Conrail by Norfolk Southern Corporation.

(C)(i) Any net income directly or indirectly attributable to—

(I) the commencement or expansion after the sale date of any business activity, or

(II) any property (other than replacement property) purchased or leased after the sale date, by Conrail or by a partnership or joint venture in which Conrail is a partner or a participant.

(ii) Clause (i) shall—

(I) not apply to the extent any activity or property was included in the five-year plan of Conrail released in June, 1985, and

(II) apply only to the extent such activity or property could have been carried on, or operated by, Norfolk Southern Corporation.

(D) Any net income from transportation services related to freight movements over Conrail's rail lines to the extent such movements could have been made more directly over Norfolk Southern Corporation's rail lines, as in existence before the sale date.

(E) Any net increase in Conrail's income (or any net reduction in Conrail's expenses) resulting directly or indirectly from—

(1) a merger or other reorganization between Conrail and Norfolk Southern Corporation.

(ii) any transfer of property from Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation, or

(iii) any abandonment or retirement of property by Conrail or Norfolk Southern Corporation for the purpose of reducing a number of duplicate or redundant properties on the combined rail systems of Conrail and Norfolk Southern Corporation.

(F) Any income attributable to any increase after the sale date in any of Conrail's rates or charges for transportation or other services (other than any adjustment for inflation or deflation) to the extent such increase results from any market advantage of Conrail as a result of its relationship at Norfolk Southern Corporation.

(G) Any other item of income, gain, expense, or loss which the Secretary determines resulted directly or indirectly from a direct or indirect effort or device by Norfolk Southen Corporation to increase Conrail's income for any purpose.

(2) The Secretary shall prescribe, for purposes of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954, the allocation of any item to which paragraph (1) applies to Norfolk Southern Corporation or to such other person, as the Secretary determines appropriate.

(c)(1) For purposes of this section, the term "allocable adjusted purchase price" means, with respect to any asset, the amount which bears the same ratio to the adjusted purchase price as—

(A) the fair market value of such asset as of the sale date, bears to

(B) the aggregate fair market value of all assets of Conrail as of such date.

(2)(A) For purposes of this section, the term "adjusted purchase price" means the amount paid for the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail pursuant to the Secretary's plan, reduced by—

(i) the cash, marketable securities, and inventory of Conrail immediately before the sale date,

(ii) the accounts receivable of Conrail immediately before the sale date (reduced by an experience-rated bad debt reserve), and

(iii) any surplus assets in any pension plan of Conrail as of the sale date (detemined on the basis of termination value).

(B) For purposes of subparagraph (A), the amount paid under the Secretary's plan—

(i) shall not include any wage concession payments, and

(ii) shall be increased by the amount of any indebtedness or accrued liability of Conrail as of the sale date, other than any indebtedness which is canceled in connection with the sale.

(e)(1) Any determination by the Secretary of the amount of any built-in deduction under subsection (b), or the amount or allocation of income under subsection (c), shall be presumed to be correct unless established otherwise by clear and convincing evidence.

(2) The Secretary shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary or appropriate to carry out the purposes of this section.

(3) For purposes of this section, the term "Norfolk Southern Corporation" includes any member of a controlled group of corporations (within the meaning of section 1563(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954) of which Norfolk Southern Corporation is a member, but does not include Conrail.

(4) For purposes of this section, the term "sale date" means the date on which the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail is consummated under the Secretary's plan.

(5) For purposes of this section, except in the case of a reference to the Secretary's plan, the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Treasury of his delegate.

AMENDMENT No. 1564

On page 30, insert the following immediately after line 10:

TRANSPORTATION OF BULK COMMODITIES

SEC. 303. (a)(1) Within five years after the date of consummation of the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of Conrail to Norfolk Southern Corporation, any shipper or receiver of bulk commodities which meets the requirements of paragraph (2) of this subsection may petition the Interstate Commerce Commission to institute a proceeding under this section.

(2) A shipper or receiver of bulk commodities may submit a petition under this subsection if, after such date the rate for transportation of such commodities by Norfolk Southern Corporation is increased to more than 110 percent of the rate for such transportation, as adjusted by the rail cost adjustment factor currently utilized by the Commission, which was in effect on the day before such date.

(b)(1) The Commission shall commence a proceeding under this section to determine the validity of the allegations of a shipper or receiver contained in a petition submitted under this section. In making such a determination, the Commission may consider such other factors as it considers appropriate, including whether any such increase in rates was attributable to reasons of efficiency based on sound managerial practices, or to inter-modal competition.

(2) Within forty-five days after such a petition is submitted, the Commission shall determine that such allegations are valid, unless Norfolk Southern Corporation demonstrates by clear and convincing evidence that such rates have not been increased by the amount specified in subsection (a)(2) of this section or that efficiencies based on sound managerial practices, or inter-modal competition were the basis for such increase in rates.

(3) If the Commission determines that such allegations are valid, the Commission shall issue an order directing that Norfolk Southern Corporation adjust such rates to an amount which is reasonable and which reflects what would be the rate for such transportation in a fully competitive market.

(c) Any order issued under this section shall be subject to judicial review in the same manner and to the same extent as orders issued by the Commission under chapter 113 of title 49, United States Code.

AMENDMENT No. 1565

On page 5, line 14, insert after "paragraph (20)(A)" the following: "except that such term shall not include any agreements unless there is a binding and restrictive agreement with Norfolk Southern Corporation that—

"(A) such Corporation's ability to utilize Conrail's built-in losses (determined presumptively by an allocation among Conrail's tangible and intangible assets of the cash price paid for the Conrail stock, plus remaining Conrail liabilities, less Conrail cash, marketable securities, inventory, and the value of its excess pension assets) shall be restricted in a manner consistent with existing Federal tax law and regulations and with the Secretary's understanding that Norfolk Southern Corporation shall abide by, and remain subject to, the limitations set forth in Income Tax Regulations, section 1.1502-15 and other related provisions of the Federal Income Tax Regulations, and

"(B) such Corporation will not directly or indirectly utilize Conrail's built-in losses by any means or through any device or method (including, but not limited to, stock or property transfers, or other capital or operating arrangements, having the effect of shifting taxable income to Conrail) having the effect of reducing the Federal tax liability of Norfolk Southern Corporation's affiliated group (other than Conrail and its existing subsidiaries).".

LAUTENBERG AMENDMENT NO. 1566

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. LAUTENBERG submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill S. 638, supra; as follows:

AMENDMENT No. 1566

On page 19, insert before line 1 the following new section:

SEC. 111. (a) The Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new title:

"TITLE VIII—PROTECTION OF AFFECTED REGIONS AFTER IMPLEMENTATION OF THE SECRETARY'S PLAN

"DEFINITIONS

"SEC. 801. (a) For purposes of this title—

"(1) the term 'affected region' means any State, county, port or port district in which any dominant railroad is the only railroad—

"(A) owning or controlling trackage rights into such region; or

"(B) carrying in excess of 80 percent of the total interstate rail freight in such region;

"(2) the term 'alternative railroad' means any railroad that desires and is capable of providing railroad transportation in an affected region, but lacks necessary trackage rights;

"(3) the term 'dominent railroad' means—

"(A) the Corporation or Norfolk Southern Corporation after the date of implementation of the Secretary's Plan pursuant to section 401(a)(4) of this Act and the sale of the interest of the United States in the common stock of the Corporation to Norfolk Southern Corporation pursuant to section 401(a)(5) of this Act; or

"(B) any corporation created by Norfolk Southern Corporation as a result of such implementation and such sale, which, acting jointly or severally, operates as a railroad in an affected region, and owns or controls all trackage rights into such region or carries in excess of 80 percent of the total interstate rail freight in such region; and

"(4) the term 'governmental authority of any affected region' means any governmental authority authorized by appropriate State law, Federal law, or agreements between or among States to maintain legal actions on behalf of an affected State, county, port or port district.

"PROTECTION OF AFFECTED REGIONS

"SEC. 802. (a)(1) The governmental authority of any affected region may file a complaint in the United States district court for any district in which such affected region is located, seeking an order granting trackage rights into such region for any specified alternative railroad. All relevant dominant railroads shall be named as defendants in such complaint.

"(2) The court may grant the relief sought by the complaint if the plaintiff governmental authority establishes, by a preponderance of the evidence that—

"(A) the specified alternative railroad sought in good faith to negotiate an agreement with the defendant dominant railroad pursuant to section 11343(a)(6) of title 49, United States Code;

"(B) such negotiations were not successful; and

"(C) granting of the trackage rights sought in the complaint is practical and will not unreasonably impair the operations of the defendant dominant railroad over the affected rail lines.

"(3) If the court determines that the plaintiff governmental authority has met its burden under subparagraphs (2) (A) and (B) of this subsection, but not with respect to subparagraph (2)(C), the court shall prescribe such lesser amount of trackage rights, if any, that plaintiff by preponderance of the evidence establishes is practical and will not unreasonably impair the operations of the defendant dominant railroad over the affected rail lines.

"(b) The court shall establish the terms of any traffic rights ordered under subsection (a). The terms shall include such payment to the defendant dominant railroad by the specified alternative railroad that provides adequate compensation for the use of the affected rail lines. Adequate compensation shall include a fair contribution to the profits of the defendant dominant railroad.

"(c)(1) Operations by any specified alternative railroad pursuant to the grant of trackage rights under subsection (a) are contingent upon the execution by the defendant dominant railroad and any specified alternative railroad of an agreement embodying all the terms established by the court under subsection (b). The court shall order the defendant dominant railroad to execute such agreement.

"(2) The agreement referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection, upon execution by the dominant railroad and a specified alternative railroad, shall be exempt from the antitrust laws and from all other laws, including State and municipal law, as necessary to allow the parties to implement the agreement, in the same manner as an agreement made pursuant to section 11341 of title 49, United States Code.

"(3) The court which orders the grant of trackage rights shall have exclusive jurisdiction to resolve any disputes arising under the executed agreement referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection.

"(d) The remedies provided for in this section shall not preclude any action or relief pursuant to the Sherman Act (15 U.S.C. 1 et seq.).".

(b) The table of contents of the Regional Rail Reorganization Act of 1973 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"TITLE VIII—PROTECTION OF AFFECTED REGIONS AFTER IMPLEMENTATION OF THE SECRETARY'S PLAN

"Sec. 801. Definitions.
"Sec. 802. Protection of affected regions.".

DIXON (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 1567

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. DIXON (for himself, Mr. PRESSLER, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. EXON, Mr. HEINZ, Mr. ROCKEFELLER, Mr. SPECTER, Mr. SIMON, AND Mr. ZORINSKY) submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by them to amendment No. 1437 proposed by Mr. DANFORTH to the bill S. 638, supra; as follows:

On page 10, line 19, beginning with "Such", strike out all through the first period on line 24.

On page 15, strike out lines 18 through 25 and insert in lieu thereof:

"(2) by amending subsection (c) to read as follows:

"(c) Except as provided in section 1152 of the Northeast Rail Service Act of 1981 (45 U.S.C. 1105), the Secretary's Plan and the Definitive Agreements and their negotiation, execution, and implementation shall not be subject to administrative review by the Commission, to other administrative review, or to judicial review; provided, however, that issues arising under the antitrust laws of the United States shall be subject to judicial review."

On page 19, line 9, immediately after the comma, insert the following: by inserting ", except for causes of action arising under the antitrust laws of the United States," immediately after "Notwithstanding any other provision of law,".

DECONCINI AMENDMENT NO. 1568

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mr. DECONCINI submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to amendment No. 1437 proposed by Mr. DANFORTH to the bill S. 638, supra; as follows:

At the end of the pending amendment, add the following:

SEC. .(a) The Senate finds that—

(1) The government and people of the United States have a longstanding friendship with the Philippines based on democratic principles and institutions;

(2) The United States has a strategic interest in the preservation of two military bases in the Philippines for the security of the Pacific region;

(3) The current unrest in the Philippines threatens to undermine the continuation of a stable, democratic government in that nation;

(4) Congress has stated that restoration of democratic institutions in the Philippines is the most effective means of defeating the proliferating communist insurgency;

(5) President Marcos has announced his intention that presidential elections be held within the Philippines to end speculation by foreign nations as to his popular support;

(6) Officials of the Government of the Philippines as well as leaders of the opposition have indicated their willingness to cooperate with a delegation of international observers * * * of the election;

(7) President Marcos has stated that it would be impossible "in a free society" to control or keep out observers and there would be no attempt to prevent any such group from entering the Philippines to monitor the election;

(8) A decision to limit access to polling places by international observers would seriously impair the ability of observer teams to verify the fairness and validity of the elections and could jeopardize continued United States economic assistance to that nation; and

(9) It has been the experience that international observers to the elections of 1982 and 1984 in El Salvador and more recently, Guatemala, were not limited access to polling places and greatly increased the fairness and credibility of those elections.

(b) The Senate hereby—

(1) Reaffirms its support for genuine, free, and fair elections in the Philippines scheduled for February 7, 1986;

(2) Stresses the importance of the presence of international observers at such elections;

(3) Urges the Philippine Government to permit clear access to the polling places for such international observers; and

(4) Intends to consider the manner in which Philippine elections are conducted in determining future aid requests.

Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, having just returned from the Philippines, I am more convinced than ever that free and fair elections on February 7, 1986, are crucial to the preservation of democracy in that nation and to the long-term strategic interests of the United States and its allies. The recently announced decision to restrict foreign observers from the polling places impairs the prospects for honest elections. This resolution expresses the Senate's belief, based upon the latest electoral accomplishments in El Salvador, Honduras, Panama, and Guatemala, that observers with direct access to polling places are essential in assuring free and fair democratic elections.

Until the late 1960's, the Philippines had a working democratic system. Unfortunately, this growth of democracy in the Philippines has been stunted in recent years—not by a lack of interest in its continued growth by a majority of Filipinos, but by the increasingly arbitrary actions of President Marcos. Since declaring martial law 13 years ago, President Marcos has circumscribed the freedom of the press, limited the freedoms of speech and assembly, and prevented economic and military reforms. His displays of favoritism and cronyism toward members of his family and a tight circle of intimates are notorious. While it is not and should not be the intent of this Government to interfere in or influence the outcome of the elections in the Philippines, it is in our interest to make every attempt to ensure that they are conducted in a free and open manner and that the results truly represent the choice of the Filipino people. And, of greatest concern to me, and, I am certain, a majority of Americans, is the flagrant disregard the Marcos regime has displayed for human and civil rights. Practices such as these are reminiscent of certain other nations, but not of a democracy. We must make it clear to both President Marcos and the opposition candidates that the restoration of democratic institutions is crucial for continued good relations with the United States.

To that end, I am reiterating the need for international observers to monitor the fairness and impartiality of the Presidential elections and that they must have open access to polling places. Based on the positive experiences of this nation with similar observer teams being sent to monitor the general elections in El Salvador in 1982 and 1984, and recently in Guatemala and Honduras, it is my belief that observers could only help to further the interests of the people of the Philippines and the growth of democracy. In cooperating with NAMFREL and COMELEC the observers could verify the absence of coercion, intimidation, and illegal balloting procedures as well as encourage a full discussion of the issues by the candidates. Not only will this reflect positively on the Nation as a whole, it will ensure that the winner of the election has the popular support needed to govern and a mandate to implement the necessary democratic changes for the enhancement of the Filipino people.

I must include a cautionary note, however, that the outcome of these elections cannot solve every problem facing the Philippines. President Marcos has a long history of breaking his promises. For this reason, I am including a provision in this resolution that future foreign aid to the Philippines be made contingent on the international observers determination that open and fair elections have indeed occurred. I attempted to reduce military aid to the Philippines during the Foreign Operations Subcommittee's markup of the fiscal year 1986 foreign aid bill this fall and will pursue this option, if required. This seems to me to be the only way to convince the Filipino people that the United States is dedicated to their economic recovery and committed to their political freedom.

I am hopeful that such a contingency need not occur. I have faith in the good judgment of the Filipino people and their respect for democratic institutions. If these elections are fair, they can help stem the tide of the Communist insurgency, revitalize the democratic process within that nation, and strengthen the positive relationship between our two nations. Whatever the outcome of the elections, it is in the best interests of this Nation to pursue a new, strengthened push to resuscitate the now stagnant flow of pluralism and dialog within the Philippines and improve the prospects for democracy. Despite the recent revelations and accusations regarding President Marcos and his alleged U.S. investments and falsified war record, I am primarily concerned with the resurgence of democratic elections. If these elections are conducted fairly and the results are reflective of the Filipino electorate, I can live with Mr. Marcos or Mrs. Aquino as President of the Philippines. Our Nation, and this Congress, should pledge itself, through this resolution, to continue to work with the people of the Philippines on issues of mutual interest and shared democratic ideals.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

SUBCOMMITTEE ON EMPLOYMENT AND PRODUCTIVITY

Mr. QUAYLE. Mr. President, the Subcommittee on Employment and Productivity will hold hearings on S. 1990, the Employment and Training Partnership Act, on February 19 and 25, 1986.

Since 1982, Congress has revised laws that govern job training, vocational education, and the Employment Service to improve State and local administration. The rationale for this reform was to make these programs more responsive to our Nation's labor market needs by increasing the involvement of the private sector and by promoting coordination among related activities.

Now I am turning to an examination of the administrative structure that carriers out the Federal role in the labor market. Is it desirable to improve coordination among Federal agencies with related responsibilities and increase private sector involvement at the Federal level? Also, as we move into an increasingly competitive world economy, is there a need to enhance and consolidate national leadership to focus attention on the development of our human resources to meet that international challenge?

To meet these objectives, S. 1990 establishes an independent agency in the executive branch of the Federal Government called the Education and Training Partnership. The partnership will administer the Job Training Partnership Act, the Wagner-Peyser Act, which authorizes the Employment Service, and the Carl D. Perkins Vocational Education Act.

Interested parties may want to refer to statements I made on this proposal last year on April 3 and December 19, which appear in the RECORD for those dates.

On February 19, at 10 a.m., the subcommittee will receive testimony from the Secretary of Labor, William E. Brock III, and the Secretary of Education, William J. Bennett. On February 25, starting at 9 a.m., the public will have an opportunity to testify.

Persons desiring to testify on February 25 should submit written requests to the Subcommittee on Employment and Productivity, SD-428, Dirksen Senate Office Building, Washington, DC 20510; attention: Renee Coe. For further details Ms. Coe may be reached at (202) 224-6306. Written testimony will be accepted from persons who cannot be scheduled for oral presentation. Requests to testify must be received by February 14.

SELECT COMMITTEE ON INDIAN AFFAIRS

Mr. ANDREWS. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the public that the Select Committee on Indian Affairs has scheduled a field hearing on February 10, 1986, in Flandreau, SD, to be held at the Flandreau Indian School Auditorium, commencing at 9 a.m., regarding the Bureau of Indian Affairs dormitory standards. Those wishing additional information should contact Mary Jane Wrenn of the committee at 224-2251.

COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES

Mr. McCLURE. Mr. President, I would like to announce for the information of the Senate and the public the scheduling of a closed hearing before the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources to receive a briefing with respect to negotiations on Micronesian status.

The hearing will take place Thursday, February 27, at 10 a.m. in room SD-366 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building in Washington, DC.

For further information, please contact Jim Beirne at (202) 224-2564.

AUTHORITY FOR COMMITTEE TO MEET

COMMITTEE ON ARMED SERVICES

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Armed Services be authorized to meet during the session of the Senate on Wednesday, January 29, 1986, in closed executive session in order to receive a worldwide intelligence briefing from the CIA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

GRAMM-RUDMAN

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, many words, pro and con, have been said on and off this floor discussing the virtues or lack of them of the Gramm-Rudman Act. As chairman of the Armed Services Committee, I have not made my voice heard, but now I think it is time that something should be said by me in that capacity.

I do not fear Gramm-Rudman with respect to the military budget. I think the military budget can survive; I do not think the American people want to see this country in a weakened military position, and I think their voice will prevail should the test come. What Gramm-Rudman is all about is the first real threat or push we have had to stop our lazy, fearsome ways, and get rid of the deficit and attempt to balance the budget. If the act works, fine; if it does not work, it is also fine; it will force the President to offer a realistic, attainable budget, and it will force Members of this body and the other body to stop being primarily concerned about what is going on in their backyard and remember their pledge on their day of admission to the Congress to defend and protect the Constitution of the United States, which in itself means to defend and protect the country that we represent.

I think it is becoming increasingly evident that many votes are going to be called for that will not be popular at home, that might even lose legislators a vote or two in their attempts to get reelected. However, the important thing to keep in mind is, will this country survive the continued spending of money that we do not have? Will it continue to survive the uncontrollable obsession that some of the leaders of our agencies have relative to telling Americans how to live their lives? In other words, I look on Gramm-Rudman as a tough, realistic way to force the President and the Congress to do what the American people have been begging us to do, get our house in order. This can be done without hurting any needed welfare programs; it can be done without hurting any needed programs.

The matter that we are on right now is a good example. The railroad that this country as a country does not need to run is Conrail, a money-losing proposition. Let's get rid of it; let's cut down every unnecessary cent that we can in our budget. I repeat, it is not going to be easy, but it is going to take something we in the West, and I guess in the East, call guts. Let's see if we have it.●

S. 1567: THE ADMINISTRATION STATES ITS POSITION

● Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, within a few weeks, the Senate will, I hope, debate S. 1567, the Water Resources Development Act.

This is important legislation.

To guide our deliberations, the administration last week issued a policy statement on this bill.

I ask that a copy of that statement be printed in the RECORD.

The statement follows:

S. 1567—WATER RESOURCES DEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1985

The Administration supports enactment of S. 1567 as reported, and particularly commends the provisions which would:

Impose comprehensive new cost-sharing to increase the local share of the costs of Army Corps of Engineers' water resource projects, which should help weed out new projects (and separable elements of existing projects) that are not economically justified;

Establish a new port user fee equal to .04 percent of the value of cargo loaded/unloaded at U.S. ports, to offset 40 percent of Corps of Engineers' harbor operations and maintenance costs; and Double the existing inland waterway fuel tax over ten years beginning in FY 1988, to help pay for Corps of Engineers' construction and rehabilitation costs of the nation's inland waterway system.

However, the inclusion of any new or expanded water resources programs, erosion of the cost-sharing and navigation user fees in S. 1567 as reported, or exemption of major water projects or geographic regions from enhanced cost-sharing requirements would seriously jeopardize the bill's acceptability to the President.

In addition, there are several other issues that require further consideration, and we anticipate working with the conference to make necessary changes.●

JCS REFORM

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, continuing the practice I started several days ago, I wish to insert in the RECORD an interesting and challenging article by Mr. William Lind, who has served Senator HART as a military adviser for a good number of years.

His title is "JCS Reform: Can Congress Take On a Tough One?"

This will point up, again, some of the challenging reasons the Armed Services Committee is proposing changes in the organizational structure of our military. I ask that the article be inserted in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From Air University Review]

JCS REFORM: CAN CONGRESS TAKE ON A TOUGH ONE?

(By William S. Lind)

One of the most important requirements for victory in combat is a competent high command. History is replete with examples of good armies being defeated because of bad leadership at the highest level, from Carthage in the Second Punic War through the British in the American Revolution and the Confederacy in the Civil War to the Germans in World War II.

Do we have highly competent military leadership today from the Joint Chiefs of Staff (JCS), our most senior military council? Many observers think we do not. The last really brilliant American military action was the Inchon landing during the Korean War. The JCS opposed it. During the Vietnam War, the JCS consistently failed to provide good advice. In his autobiography, General William C. Westmoreland said that "no commander could ever hope for greater support than I received from . . . General Wheeler and the other members of the Joint Chiefs." The support was, of course, for a strategy that failed. The JCS blessed the plan for the Iran raid, a plan so complex that failure was inevitable. The hallmark of JCS action has become, not competent planning, but "pie dividing"—ensuring that each service gets a piece of the action. Grenada was the most recent case. The original plan called for just the Navy and the Marines to participate. But the JCS insisted that the Army and Air Force be brought in also, so they could get their share of the glory.

The root problem is that not only the JCS but virtually all the upper echelons of our military structure have become bureaucracies. In a bureaucratic organization, the overall goals and purposes of the institution—what it is supposed to accomplish in the outside world—are broken down into ever-smaller units until they constitute something one person can do, a job. The job is precisely defined and in most cases narrowly circumscribed. A variety of formal and (usually more powerful) informal sanctions work to keep the individual's effort focused within the "box" that is his job.

In theory, all the boxes are linked in a great chain which ensures that every job supports the institution's external goals and purposes. But, in fact, something different usually happens. The people in the institution must have some set of values in order, if nothing else, to prioritize their time and effort. They cannot focus on the institution's external goals and purposes; if they do, they quickly find themselves overstepping the bounds of their job description and getting slapped down. Faced with this unpleasant prospect, they tend to adopt two basic values. The first is personal career success. The second is a tendency to see as most important those things which take most of their time.

What is the effect of these two values on the way an institution functions? The decisionmaking process comes to be dominated not by questions relating to effectiveness in the external, competitive world but by intra-institutional considerations.

Why is this so? Because intra-institutional issues—the office upstairs, the office downstairs, the competing program, branch, or service, etc.—take most of most people's time. As people come (usually unconsciously) to identify as most important the things that take most of their time, these issues, not the external world, become the bases of their decisions. And since internal matters are also the most important concerns of their superiors, they can best advance their personal careers by putting these matters first and working hardest on them. Ultimately, they become accustomed to subordinating external effectiveness to pleasing their superiors with reference to internal matters. Those who don't do so pay the price in terms of career failure.

Both tendencies—careerism and seeing as most important the matters that take the most time—are accentuated in institutions where there is no lateral entry (i.e., where the people at the top have spent three or four decades behaving this way) and where there is no regular calling to account by an annual balance sheet. Both characteristics typify military services.

The JCS is a microcosm of the overall military bureaucracy, but it is a very intense microcosm. It is specifically designed to be an arena where the services log-roll their parochial interests. The dual-hatting of service chiefs as members of the Joint Chiefs, the requirement for unanimous decisions, a joint staff made of officers who must return to their parent services—all these things not only perpetuate but intensify bureaucratic behavior. That the decisions and recommendations from such a body are frequently of little use in the outside world should not be surprising. The focus on intra-institutional concerns is built into the system.

JCS reform is now being discussed both in Congress and in the press. Two of the most important reasons are the disquiet of some members of Congress with deficiencies in recent military operations and calls for reform from two former JCS members, former Chairman of the JCS, Air Force General David Jones, and former Chief of Staff of the Army, General Edward "Shy" Meyer. Within the last several years, these two officers have made some sharp, public criticisms of the way the JCS functions. General Jones has said:

"The corporate advice provided by the Joint Chiefs of Staff is not crisp, timely, very useful, or very influential. And that advice is often watered down and issues are papered over in the interest of achieving unanimity. . . . Individual service interests too often dominate JCS recommendations and actions at the expense of broader defense interests."

What must be done to give reasonable assurance of a competent high command? The only adequate step is the replacement of the entire Joint Staff system with a Prussian-model general staff.

Some have attempted to portray a general staff as a system that vests all power in one individual. But that is not what the Prussian general staff was all about. That did occur under General Erich von Ludendorff in the 1916-18 period, but it was a result of a vacuum at the top caused by the personal weakness of Kaiser Wilhelm II (it has well been said that Hitler listened to his generals too little; the Kaiser to his too much).

To understand the essence of the Prussian general staff, it is necessary to look at its origin in the Scharnhorst reforms that followed Prussia's disastrous defeat by Napolean in 1806. Scharnhorst and his fellow military reformers—who were political liberals, not reactionary Junkers—were faced with the task of creating enduring military excellence within the framework of civilian control of the military, in the person of the King of Prussia. They attempted to create, not a new command structure for the Prussian army, but a system to provide the best possible military advice to commanders at all levels. The general staff was an advisory system, not a command system. That is, of course, exactly what we need from any replacement for the Joint Staff system: the best possible advice to the civilians who hold the ultimate military authority, the President and the Secretary of Defense.

The Prussian general staff was that is called a "socialized," rather than a bureaucratic, organization. Its socialization centered on three characteristics. The first was very careful selection and education of staff officers. General staff officers were selected young, usually at the rank of captain, before the bureaucratic mindset had time to develop. The selection process was extremely rigorous, with only about 1 percent of those who attempted to become general staff officers finally making the grade. The general staff was kept very small to ensure quality and prevent bureaucracy: even at the Wehrmacht's peak strength in World War II, there were fewer than 1000 general staff officers. The education process was long and thorough, with emphasis on how to think, not what to think, and on the military art, not management and formats.

General staff officers also periodically returned to field units to ensure that they did not forget the realities of the field.

The second major characteristic of the Prussian general staff was that once an officer was accepted by the general staff, he was a general staff officer for life. His promotion was controlled by the general staff, not by the branch from which he came. This situation gave him license to be objective. It contrasts strongly with the JCS system, where the officer must return from Joint Staff duty to his service and branch, which has sample opportunity to destroy his career if he was not perceived as a faithful "water carrier" in his Joint Staff job. Only permanent general staff status can protect the officer who dares to cross the service's parochial interests.

The third major characteristic of the general staff was an internal atmosphere that stressed frankness, imagination, and innovation. Prussian general staff officers were generally men of strong character, and if this meant that a good number of them were also somewhat eccentric, that was no handicap. At one point, General Helmuth von Moltke actually directed recruitment of eccentrics and oddballs on the grounds that they usually came up with the best ideas. The emphasis on frankness was very strong. A general staff officer had not only a right but a duty to be direct with his superiors. He was expected to give them his full and honest opinions and advice, whether they asked for them or not. In a bureaucratic system such as JCS, frankness is frowned on, because it reveals all the comfortable intra-institutional tradeoffs for what they usually are: detriments to national security.

It is these three characteristics that made the Prussian general staff so effective, and they are what those who want a general staff here seek to emulate. Naturally, an American general staff would not be an exact copy of the Prussian. The Prussian/German general staff was exclusively an army staff, and, at least in World War II, did not extend to the highest command level. An American general staff would be all-service and would extend to the highest level. The German general staff was oriented exclusively toward tactics and operations, leaving German strategy and grand strategy disastrously adrift in both world wars. Our general staff would also have responsibilities at the strategic and grand strategic levels.

What are the chances of replacing the Joint Chiefs of Staff with a general staff? The administration has shown no interest in JCS reform, so if anything is to be done, it will have to be done by Congress. Last year the House passed a JCS reform bill, but unfortunately it focused on changing the relationships among the Chairman, the other members of the JCS, and the Secretary of Defense, not on improving the quality of decisions and advice from the JCS. However, the Senate Armed Services Committee is currently doing a major study of JCS reform, and it appears as if that study will address the deficiencies within the JCS itself and suggest possible remedies, to include consideration of a general staff system. Despite major behind-the-scenes efforts by the Navy to derail the study, both the committee chairman, Senator Barry Goldwater, and the ranking Democrat, Senator Sam Nunn, appear determined to do a thorough job. If the Senate study presents an accurate picture of a general staff system and its potential advantages, it may at least lift the debate over a general staff out of the mythology of "Prussian militarism" in which it was imbedded by Allied propaganda during the world wars.

On the tactical and operational levels where it operated, the Prussian general staff did a remarkable job of producing military excellence for almost 150 years. If we are to break the pattern of failure that has characterized our military actions for the last thirty years, we need to do what the Prussians did: institutionalize military excellence. That can only be done by adopting a structure for our high command that reflects the basic characteristics of the Prussian general staff. It is time to give a general staff system the serious and objective consideration it merits.●

PROPOSED ARMS SALES

● Mr. LUGAR. Mr. President, section 36(b) of the Arms Export Control Act requires that Congress receive advance notification of proposed arms sales under that act in excess of $50 million or, in the case of major defense equipment as defined in the act, those in excess of $14 million. Upon such notification, the Congress has 30 calendar days during which the sale may be reviewed. The provision stipulates that, in the Senate, the notification of proposed sales be sent to the chairman of the Foreign Relations Committee.

In keeping with my intention to see that such information is available to the full Senate, I ask to have printed in the RECORD at this point the notification I have received.

The notification follows:

DEFENSE SECURITY ASSISTANCE AGENCY,
Washington, DC, January 24, 1986.

In reply refer to: I-19072/85ct

Hon. RICHARD C. LUGAR,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Pursuant to the reporting requirements of Section 36(b)(1) of the Arms Export Control Act, we are forwarding herewith Transmittal No. 86-22, concerning the Department of the Army's proposed Letter(s) of Offer to Norway for defense articles and services estimated to cost $26 million. Shortly after this letter is delivered to your office, we plan to notify the news media.

Sincerely,

PHILIP C. GAST, Director, Lieutenant General, USAF.

NOTICE OF PROPOSED ISSUANCE OF LETTER OF OFFER PURSUANT TO SECTION 36(b)(1) OF THE ARMS EXPORT CONTROL ACT

(i) Prospective Purchaser: Norway.

(ii) Total Estimated Value:

Major defense equipment*.	$15,000,000
Other	11,000,000
Total	26,000,000

* As defined in section 47(6) of the Arms Export Control Act.

(iii) Description of Articles or Services Offered: Thirty-six M48A5 tanks with associated support equipment, tool sets and concurrent spare parts.

(iv) Military Department: Army (VGX).

(v) Sales Commission, Fee, etc., Paid, Offered, or Agreed to be Paid: None.

(vi) Sensitivity of Technology Contained in the Defense Articles or Defense Services Proposed to be Sold: None.

(vii) Section 28 Report: Case not included in Section 28 report.

(viii) Date Report Delivered to Congress: January 24, 1986.

POLICY JUSTIFICATION

Norway—M48A5 Tanks

The Government of Norway has requested the purchase of 36 M48A5 tanks with associated support equipment, tool sets and concurrent spare parts. The estimated cost is $26 million.

This sale will contribute to the foreign policy and national security objectives of the United States by improving the military capabilities of Norway; furthering NATO rationalization, standardization, and interoperability; and enhancing the defense of the Western Alliance.

The M48A5 tanks will be used to modernize and upgrade the Norwegian armor capability. Norway will have no difficulty absorbing these tanks into its armed forces.

The sale of this equipment and support will not affect the basic military balance in the region.

No prime contractor will be involved in this sale as these are rebuilt tanks that will be taken from inventory.

Implementation of this sale will require the assignment of six additional U.S. Government personnel to Norway for three weeks.

There will be no adverse impact on U.S. defense readiness as a result of this sale.●

U.S. MILITARY REFORM

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, in keeping with my decision to make available to my colleagues writings from people other than in the Senate concerning the need for reform of our military structure, I am once again submitting for the RECORD out of the Air University Review of September-October of 1985, a very deep and penetrating study of this whole matter of military reform, written by Gregory D. Foster, who is a graduate of the military academy. He is a well-recognized consultant on national security affairs, civil military relations, and future research.

This is one of the most thoughtful articles I have come across relative to this subject and I am sure my colleagues will enjoy reading it.

I ask that it be inserted at this point in my remarks.

The article follows:

CONFLICT TO THE YEAR 2000: THE CHALLENGE FOR MILITARY REFORM

(By Gregory D. Foster)

The noted inventor and philanthropist Charles Franklin Kettering once observed: "We should all be concerned about the future because we will have to spend the rest of our lives there." How embarrassing that such a statement of the obvious should embody a degree of wisdom lost on most of us, for the future holds far too many secrets to warrant the sanguine indifference with which it is typically faced.

The strategic environment of tomorrow promises to be vastly more complex and demanding than anything that has confronted the United States during its brief history. This will necessitate a degree of foresight and planning sadly absent in recent years. Foresight and planning will be for nought, however, if not matched by a commensurate degree of institutional adaptation. Such change is especially necessary within the American military establishment, which repeatedly has shown itself better equipped—both psychologically and physically—to fight the last war than to fight the next one.

To those who seek from within to ready the American military to perform its myriad mission—Pentagon planners and decision makers—and, no less, to those who seek from without to change the institution—the so-called military reformers—the future should be a concern of fundamental importance. Just as our visions of the future influence, and perhaps even determine, the policies and programs of the present, so too do today's decisions affect the course of tomorrow. The leading question that begs our attention, therefore, is the following: What form will wars of the future take? In a more inclusive sense, what will be the overall nature of the conflict environment confronting the United States and its military establishment?

In framing this inquiry and attempting to answer it, the author accepts the premise that conflict in various forms is inevitable, although war as traditionally defined is not. Therefore, military planning and reform must be directed at accommodating a wide range of contingencies that fall outside the legalistic definitional bounds of warfare, per se. Of no less importance is the recognition that ostensibly discrete and isolated events have assumed an unprecedented degree of interrelatedness in today's world—moot tribute perhaps to Hegel's Axiom of Internal Relations.[1] Thus, the context within which planning and reform take place must go beyond purely military and international considerations and deal as well with things both nonmilitary (e.g., political and economic) and domestic. Finally, the year 2000 is considered here an appropriate forecasting time horizon—near enough to afford reasonable projections, yet far enough out to permit requisite policy and program planning.

Any undertaking of this nature, especially one constrained by printed-page limitations, must be accompanied by the acknowledgement that gauging the future accurately is inherently difficult. To begin with, the methodological state of the art is woefully inadequate for predictive purposes. Despite the pretentious claims of econometricians, operations researchers, and others of their persuasion, futurology qualifies as little more than pre-science—an order of thought more rigorous than the reading of animal entrails, to be sure, but only slightly more reassuring than astrological ruminations. The pseudoscientific approaches employed to date by various authorities have tended to provide shallow cover for underlying policy preferences, value premises, and assumptions. It is no linguistic fluke, therefore, that purists have preferred the semantic robustness of forecasting and even strategic planning to prediction. This tenuous claim to scientific legitimacy explains in large measure why the most popular and widely embraced descriptions of the future (namely, those of Herman Kahn and Alvin Toffler) tend to be based on intuitive speculation, in which the fertility of the author's imagination, rather than the method employed, is the criterion by which others judge the quality of the vision.

Similarly, there is a common tendency to treat the future as if it were merely an extension of the present and past. The validity of this approach remains as contentious today as it has been for centuries. For one thing, it is virtually impossible to identify all of the relevant historical variables surrounding a particular event or set of circumstances, much less to establish causation. Therefore, "historical literacy" may produce little more than self-delusion. For another thing, the more we know about something, the less we seem to understand it. Consequently, the accumulation of facts over time may breed a degree of entropy that makes reliance on chance, by comparison, a preferred course of action.

The decelerating effects of bureaucratic inertia, political conflict, and intellectual flaccidity constitute a third obstacle to describing the future with any certainty. However prescient a given prognosis may seem at the moment, the rate of realization rarely is as rapid as anticipated. Were it otherwise, we might expect to be living today under the dystopian conditions described in Orwell's 1984 or Huxley's Brave New World, about to enter into the era of world government envisioned by idealistic futurists, or engaged in one of the unthinkable nuclear conflagrations that the late Herman Kahn made so convincingly plausible. Moreover, it seems highly unlikely that these mitigating factors within the bureaucracy, the political sphere, and the intellectual community will manifest themselves any less pervasively and effectively in the years ahead. Thus, one must seek consolation in the fact that what at first may seem but a frustrating impediment to progress actually may be a blessing in disguise.

What then are the intellectual scope and exploratory parameters of the "prognosis" presented here? Namely,

To define a reasoned, plausible future that represents a synthesis of historical experience and emerging trends, while also incorporating selected speculations of a conservatively imaginative nature that fall somewhere outside the bounds of mainstream thought;

To describe what the prospects for and the nature of the conflict will be, rather than what they should be—thereby establishing the bounds within which planning and reform will be forced to operate, while conceding that certain features of the external environment will remain beyond the ability of particular policies and programs to influence;

To present what Kahn would have called a surprise-free projection, by subordinating the less probable, exceptional occurrences that provide the most pronounced stimuli to change but also offer the least useful guidance for policy and program formulation; and

For the most part, to avoid vague prescriptions based on "alternative futures," in favor of a more parsimonious definition of the future, which, in providing greater clarity and certitude, also runs a higher risk of proving wrong.

THE FUTURE GLOBAL ENVIRONMENT

Certain general features of tomorrow's international environment seem almost assured. The world itself promises to become a polycentric armed camp with frequently changing centers of power. The order and symmetry that ushered in the century will have metamorphosed into a cacophonous din of national and subnational voices, each clamoring for rights and perquisites unfettered by the burdens of responsibility to any higher order. Contributing to this state of affairs will be greatly accelerated rates of change, increasing levels of complexity and uncertainty, transient loyalties, and heightened demands for a more equitable distribution of global wealth and power. Collectively, these conditions will lower the threshold of crisis decisionmaking so that previously routine matters will assume crisis proportions and thus necessitate greater responsiveness from governments and their supporting institutions (e.g., the military).

Beyond this level of generality, the future of conflict will be greatly influenced not only by purely military developments but by political, economic, technological, and demographic developments as well. The interactions of these developments will provide the stimuli for conflict and establish its parameters. Equally important will be those purely domestic developments that ultimately will dictate the nature and extent of U.S. response.

Military developments

Militarily, there will be a continued scramble for advanced military technology, particularly among so-called developing nations. This demand will reflect the insatiable thirst of most emergent states for prestige and quick-fix modernization that is less painful and time-consuming than political and economic development. Although global arms purchases have leveled off and may even be on the decline, the factors that have contributed to this very recent trend are not likely to continue. First, the slowdown in petrodollars brought on by the current oil glut may well be superseded by new revenue-stimulating crises caused by other critical resource and commodity maldistributions around the globe. Second, Third World debt burdens, which have both resulted from and further inhibited arms purchases, may be disregarded by both arms buyers willing to sacrifice domestic investment and sellers whose yearning for influence rivals the buyers' eagerness for the weapons. Third, the market saturation that purportedly has filled arsenals and sated weapons appetites is likely to be overcome by the eventual obsolescence of current weapons inventories, which will create new demand; by the pervasiveness of conflict, which, through combat attrition, will create other new demands; and by enhanced capacities for technological assimilation.

Accompanying this resurgence of arsenal building will be an expansion of military budgets and forces, most notably among developing countries that control critical resources. Similarly, the 49 percent of the world's developing states now under military rule will be joined (or replaced) in the years ahead by other states in search of instant power or unable to maintain internal social and political cohesion.

The spread of nuclear weapons also will continue unabated, with perhaps as many as thirty-one states possessing this capability by the turn of the century. A sizable number of these new possessor nations will be worrisome because of their propensities for conflict, their geographic vulnerability, or their potential for internal instability. While this troubling trend may increase the potential for nuclear blackmail by these incipient demipowers, the weight of historical evidence suggests that it actually may induce more responsible behavior.[2]

Finally, despite the current negotiating impasse, domestic and international pressures will lead almost certainly to a theater and/or strategic nuclear arms agreement between the United States and the Soviet Union. This step will give new hope and temporary self-congratulatory pause to anti-nuclear activists, while also sending a strong nonproliferation signal to the so-called have-not nations. On the other hand, given the fragmentation of the arms control process, there will be strong incentives for both superpowers to divert military spending into other areas of comparative military advantage (e.g., conventional force modernization and expansion), thereby fostering renewed doubt about the extent to which the risks of war actually have been reduced.

Political developments

Future political developments will provide a particularly fertile breeding ground for conflict. A proliferation of new international actors—multinational enterprises, international agencies, and newly sovereign states—will contribute to the emergence of new power blocs built primarily around the possession of critical resources or short-term, shared security interests. Heightened nationalism in the developing world will be met by declining nationalism among the developed states.

The next fifteen years and beyond will be a period of floating coalitions in which bilateral relationships focused on specific issues predominate. Traditional alliance structures will weaken appreciably and in some cases disappear. The so-called nonaligned movement will grow in power, if not in stature. As it expands beyond its current membership of 101 nations, it will become more unwieldy, cumbersome, and strife-riven as a collective body, although its visibility and the stridency of selected individual members will provide a rallying point and constraining counterweight to great power intervention and exploitation.

NATO will remain an operating alliance in name and appearance only. Rather than openly fracturing, it will gradually drift apart as member nations increasingly pursue narrow national interests and diverge on fundamental economic, political, and military principles. As the Europeans continue to look inward and the center of gravity of U.S. foreign policy shifts toward the Pacific Basin, the trends of recent years will magnify.[3]

A related development will be the continued weakening and eventual substantive dismantling of the United Nations. Although, as with NATO, the structure will remain, its legitimacy as a unifying body for nations to seek common global objectives and its influence in resolving international problems, which may have been vested in the organization during some periods in the past, will diminish significantly.[4]

Floating coalitions and crumbling international organizations will be merely the most civilized manifestations of a deeper underlying discontent among the poor, unempowered, and disenfranchised of the world. The plethoric crises of unfulfilled expectations that result will produce an increasingly widespread ideological disaffection among the masses and, in response, intensified authoritarian and totalitarian repression by ruling elites. Political dogma that once coalesced both revolutionary and reactionary fervor will give way to a near-universal utilitarian morality, bred of cynicism but tempered by hope, the colloquial verbalization of which will be, "what works, works." Juxtaposed against this ethic will be concentrated pockets of religious extremism—especially in the Moslem world—involving zealous minorities that practice a refined form of exploitative mob psychology.

Economic developments

If ever there were an iron law of international relations, it is that economic vitality and strategic success go hand in hand. The course of the future will be so much a function of this tenet that defense planners will rue the day they neglected the strategic ramifications of the international marketplace. This title of a recent book—The Real World War: The Coming Battle for the New Global Economy and Why We Are in Danger of Losing—captures the essence of the situation facing the United States. Authors Hunter Lewis and Donald Allison note:

"If there is a single great fact of our era, it is not the continuing rivalry between Russia and the West. Instead, it is the emergence of the first truly international industrial marketplace and the struggle between the leading trading nations and blocs—the United States, Western Europe, Japan, Singapore-Taiwan-Hong Kong-Korea, Mexico-Brazil, and, potentially, China—to control this new global economy." [5]

The years ahead will produce the full maturation of this global economy and the attendant manifestations of financial, industrial, resource, and trade independence. As never before, the health of the U.S. domestic economy and the turbulent international economy will be inextricably intertwined—a circumstance that will be most startlingly clear in the relationship of the U.S. budget deficit to international exchange rates, trade and Third World debt—any and all of which could precipitate major crises.[6]

Given the character of the American political system, it is unlikely that the budget deficit will diminish appreciably, if at all.[7] Furthermore, increased competition for global markets, continued reliance on overseas resources and commodities, and the further obsolescence of key industrial sectors will contribute to severe trade imbalances for the United States and for other nations as well. The near-term solution for many nations will be expanded protectionist measures that easily could lead to a new wave of trade wars, even involving the physical interdiction of goods and traffic. Such possibilities signal a radical departure from the longheld idealistic notion that commerce is the handmaiden of peace. As argued by one proponent of a neomercantilist strategy: "International trade is not harmonious. It is competitive, and the stakes are very high. . . . Interdependence leads to intervention."[8]

Equally alarming is the looming threat of debt crises and defaults. Generally speaking, the year 2000 will signal little change in the distribution of global wealth: less-developed countries will hold 80 percent of the world population but probably no more than 24 percent of world GNP. Large-scale borrowing will remain the shortcut to temporary pecuniary satisfaction. But the inability or unwillingness of even a few debtor nations to repay loans could produce trauma in the world financial system leading to domestic retrenchment and, possibly, to pressures from the U.S. banking community for the physical seizure of foreign assets.

Much of what happens in the world economy will depend on whether or not another energy crisis occurs. The prospects for such an occurrence are considerable, and the consequences are likely to be more debilitating than in the past, due to the increased share of GNP now devoted by Western economies to energy expenditures.[9] Similar potential exists for a critical materials crisis, given the continuing dependency of the United States and its allies on foreign sources of supply. A seedbed of crisis potential rests in the vulnerability of key land and sea lines of resource flow to disruption by even minor threats.

Technological developments

Technology will carry most of our brightest hopes and darkest fears for the future. Properly developed and used, it will provide an effective antidote to greed, hate, ignorance, and xenophobia. Improperly developed and used, it will merely accentuate such tendencies.

Absent rigorous criteria based on necessity and sufficiency, the centrifugal tendencies of technological momentum will intensify the incessant quest of all military establishments for increased speed, range, accuracy, lethality, reliability, endurance, and survivability of the instruments of war. Thus, weapon system costs and the self-perpetuating dynamics of international arms competition will continue to escalate.

The most discernible advances in military technology between now and the end of the century will be in the areas of computerization, telecommunications, surveillance and target acquisition (the search for global transparency), stealth technology (the countervailing search for global opaqueness), navigation and guidance (including the leap from smart to brilliant weapons), and transportation. Worldwide satellite communications will both improve the chances of overcoming social and cultural barriers and afford vast propaganda potential. Teleconferencing will enhance the potential for face-to-face dialogue with wayward allies and resolute adversaries alike. Dramatic medical advances in preventive treatment, diagnostics, and catastrophic surgery will compensate, to some extent, for the increased lethality and destructiveness of modern weaponry.

Some of the most dramatic impacts on military operations will come from emerging technologies that will not be fully operational until the twenty-first century. These include artificial intelligence (and its progeny, expert systems), bionics/cyborgization, genetic engineering, parapsychology, robotics, weather modification, and "natural" disaster manipulation. Such exotic technologies could change not only the face of traditional combat but also the very nature of power relations among nations. At the most plausible, attainable level are those developments that range from fully automated tanks and aircraft to super computers that evaluate options and make nuclear attack and retaliation decisions. Somewhat further removed are those advances in bionics and genetic engineering that eventually could result in the replacement of humans in combat by indestructible humanoid clones. At the most esoteric extreme, full exploitation of psychic phenomena could lead to the human ability to read enemy documents from a distance, track and predict enemy locations and movements, cause the instant death of adversaries, mold the thoughts of enemy leaders, or even disabled enemy weapons and equipment. For the foreseeable future, such advances seem hardly likely to overcome the stigmatic embrace of what has come to be called the "giggle factor."

Demographic developments

Emerging demographic conditions will figure significantly as both precipitant and constraint in the future of conflict. There will be an unprecedented surge in global population, particularly in the Third World where 92 percent of the 1.5 billion increase between now and the year 2000 will occur. Significant increases in urban crowding will lead to heightened tensions and a greater likelihood of urban violence.

There will be an acceleration of migration patterns from east to west and from south to north, with legal and illegal immigration into the United States alone expected to reach at least 450,000 annually. The resultant increases in ethnic diversity and intermixture will lead to improved cross-cultural understanding but also may contribute to political destabilization, especially in those recipient nations where individual liberties are less sanctified and class boundaries more pronounced than in the United States.

Minorities will come to constitute ever larger percentages of the American population. The effects of this will range from the altered racial composition of the U.S. Armed Forces—and all that portends for civic consciousness, social equity, and military effectiveness—to the more volatile possibility of ethnic factionalism in the country. There will be increased potential for another Mariel boatlift-like "dumping" of culturally unassimilable aliens onto American shores by Castro and other like-minded despots, as well as greater likelihood of an upsurge in domestic violence involving ethnic concentrations with links to terrorism (e.g., Puerto Ricans and Armenians). Such ethnic factionalism may artificially impede or accelerate U.S. interventionist tendencies, especially within the Western Hemisphere. (It is interesting to speculate, for instance, what different effects the sizable Mexican-American and Cuban-American populations in this country might have on U.S. decisions to intervene in Mexico and Cuba respectively.)

Western populations, on the whole, will age appreciably, while age distributions in the Third World will remain relatively unchanged.[10] Because these trends will affect the size and composition of the military forces fielded by individual states, they will have significant implications for the future of conflict, particularly insofar as they influence the abilities of advanced and developing nations respectively to wage various forms of manpower-intensive, low-intensity conflict.

Both NATO and the Warsaw Pact will experience a declining pool of young military manpower (seventeen to thirty years of age).[11] For NATO, this decrease could portend, among other things, greater use of women and civilians in both traditional and nontraditional military roles. For the Warsaw Pact, it will affect the composition of Soviet armed forces (up to 30 percent of Soviet military personnel will come from the Central Asian and Moslem populations by 1999) and may influence the degree to which the Soviets will need to rely on their allies.

Domestic developments

Domestically, much of what happens will depend on the prevailing public values and attitudes of the moment. Although recent trends suggest greater public confidence in public institutions, renewed patriotism, and a tempering of the narcissistic orientation of the 1970s, these attributes are hardly immutable, enduring features of the contemporary American character. Assuming that crisis decisionmaking will be the future norm, that government will show itself increasingly incapable of handling crises, and that the United States will be confronted by a rash of highly ambiguous international situations in which interests and objectives are equally vague, the following conditions seem likely:

Continued skepticism toward governing institutions and national leaders.

Less ethnocentrism, leading to greater acceptance of ethnic and cultural differences and perhaps to decreased patriotism (relative to that of earlier generations).

Declining acceptance of the utility of military force, yet increasing concern about the powerlessness of the United States, particularly in the face of "pygmy tyrants."

Continued individual narcissim, simultaneously producing less willingness to sacrifice for collective goals, yet more thirst for adventuristic self-gratification. (This will reflect a pragmatic reassertion of individual over collective rights, rather than a form of untethered hedonism.)

Pronounced levels of alienation, anomie, and cynicism, leading to a largely unfulfilled search for moral anchoring.

The final demise of the hero in American culture and with it the further diminution of the military as a source of societal role models.

Heightened emphasis on credentialism and the success ethic, thus continuing the trend in favor of vicarious experience rather than lived experience as a primary basis for public policy.[12]

Accompanying these characteristics will be a continued loss of U.S. prestige in the international arena. Collectively, these factors will feed the emergency of more (and more vocal) single-interest constituencies intent on asserting themselves and gaining publicity under the guise of "restoring the nation to greatness." Increased public scrutiny of defense will lead to justifiable demands for the rationalization of defense organization and spending, while further confounding policy and strategy.

Congress will expand its involvement in the formulation and conduct of foreign and defense policy; the military establishment will become increasingly politicized and civilianized; and there will be a further usurpation of military advice by adademic strategists. One of the most identifiable results of all these shifts will be a reinforcement of the pronounced centrist tendency that has mainifested itself in all recent presidential administrations.[13]

Recent events foreshadow the almost certain election of a woman or minority president by the end of the century. The election of a woman may well lead to hostile testing of U.S. resolve, which, in turn, could prompt a female president to take extraordinary measures to demonstrate her toughness. The election of a minority president could have any of a number of important consequences, depending on the personality of the electee. These might include changes in traditional alliance structures, in relations with the Third World. and even in the acceptable racial composition of the U.S. Armed Forces.

Depending on precisely how these various development concatenate, the future may follow any of a number of paths. The actual course taken will depend on a number of factors, including the number of independent actors on the world stage; the nature of the resultant interactions (i.e., cooperation born of interdependence versus competition born of dependence or coercion); the degree of integration or assimilation; the existence or nonexistence of universally accepted standards of behavior, as reflected in world opinion, treaty ratification, etc.; and the occurrence or nonoccurrence of catalytic crises that precipitate chain reactions. Nevertheless, the likelhoood of various future courses and outcomes seems clear, based on current circumtances and past history.

The most likely path of the future will be a gradual drift toward global anarchy that will not reach its zenith until the post-2000 period. This will reflect a continuous, though not drastic, accentuation of the condition of disequilibrium that existed at the start of the Reagan administration.

The next most likely path will be more pronounced shift toward global anarchy precipitated by a confluence of unexpected events and conditions. This will culminate, by the year 2000, in a condition of general global chaos and disorder that existing governing structures and processes will be ill-equipped to handle.

A dynamic equilibrium (balance of power) situation created by the natural checks and balances of the international system is a third possible course for the future. Historical precedent would accord a higher probability to this alternative. However, there is mounting evidence that such inherent systemic stabilizing features as presently exist will obsolesce rapidly in the face of accelerating rates of change. Absent appropriate adaptations, the "muddling through" that has characterized most global interactions to date seems unlikely to keep anarchic tendencies within tolerable limits.

A fourth, and even less likely, occurrence would be the imposition of a world empire by one or more of the major powers in the aftermath of a precipitous shift toward global anarchy. There seems little prospect that circumstances would deteriorate so drastically or that authority could be imposed so extensively as to make this a plausible scenario.

The least likely future path for mankind is that leading to a world community or world government that results from the voluntary association, or compliance, of all or most of the world's independent actors. Such willing devolution of power is, and will remain for the foreseeable future, totally out of character with the behavior of most established nation-states, large and small.[14]

AN ARRAY OF THREATS

Arrayed against these environmental developments will be a profusion of potential threats to the United States, each possessing its own distinguishable characteristics and capabilities. The importance of identifying these threats is captured by the words of Princeton University's Klaus Knorr: "Threat perception is not only concerned with whether or not a threat exists, but also with its character, especially the quality and magnitude of the implied peril." [15]

Ideally, a country or force constitutes a threat only to the extent that it threatens specific interests and objectives. Realistically, however, the vagueness of most interests and objectives, the practical difficulties of establishing priorities among them, the unpredictability of the growing environment, and the need for a measure of continuity in planning combine to make it more appropriate to define threats in terms of the extent to which they hold fundamentally incompatible values and/or pursue a range of incompatible interests and objectives vis-à-vis the United States.

Judged against these criteria, a number of prospective threats present themselves. For planning purposes, these threats can be ordered on the basis of two considerations: the threat's overall power potential (i.e., the size and capability of its military establishment, its access to sustaining resources, and the strength of its economic and social infrastructure) and the perceived probability that crises involving the threat will occur.

For the time being, the Soviet Union and the People's Republic of China will remain the only first-order threats confronting the United States.[16] On the whole, the Soviets will be guided by the same foreign policy goals that have energized their conduct in recent years: avoiding direct military confrontation with the United States; promoting control and consolidation of Eastern Europe; benefiting from scientific, technological, and economic intercourse with the West; forestalling "encirclement" by Japan, China, and the developed West; improving relations with the European members of NATO; simultaneously pursuing arms control and arms buildup; and exploiting Third World political crises and power vacuums without incurring undue costs or risks.[17]

The Soviets will continue to reserve their most aggressive behavior for the peripheral areas of the world, where they will expand the use of arms sales, proxies, and advisers. Relations with the West will be characterized by the concurrent pursuit of competition and détente. They will assiduously avoid direct confrontation, seeking accommodation and conciliation where it is to their advantage, while also engaging in the frequent use of active measures (disinformation, forgery, press manipulation, agents of influence, and, under carefully orchestrated conditions, assassination and kidnapping as well).

Other developments of note will include the following:

With Konstantin Chernenko's passing, a power struggle may develop, particularly if successor Mikhail Gorbachev's policies do not coincide with those of more conservative members of the Politburo or the military. This could cause temporary fits and starts, but no fundamental change, in U.S.-Soviet relations.

Expansion and modernization of Soviet military forces will continue (even if a marginally reduced rates). Although the resultant deprivation of various domestic sectors will attest to the further deterioration of the Soviet economy, this will have little appreciable effect on the resilience of the ruling regime or the larger society.

Soviet involvement in Afghanistan may well last until the end of the century, although without severe political or military repercussions.

Finally, the cohesion of the Warsaw Pact alliance will be weakened materially by growing disenchantment of bloc members with Soviet leadership and forced economic interdependence, by improved ties between East and West Germany, by the emergence of various independent movements (including peace groups) throughout Eastern Europe, and by other circumstances. While sorely testing Soviet insecurity, this growing divergence within the alliance is likely to be met by political repression rather than by military intervention.

China will achieve increased stature beyond that already ascribed to it by one sinologist: "For the first time in over 100 years, China stands squarely on the world state as an emergent international power. . . . [This] has irrevocably altered the world power equation."[18] The country's concerted commitment to achieve modernization will be exceeded only by its obsession with reunification of the mainland with Taiwan, Hong Kong, and Macao. Although current plans call for military modernization ostensibly to take a back seat to agricultural, industrial, and scientific and technological modernization, the ultimate effect of any modernization will be to increase overall power potential, thereby making the P.R.C. a force to reckon with throughout Asia.

The U.S. desire to cement high-technology commercial ties with the P.R.C. as a means of leveraging the U.S.S.R. is more likely to play into China's hands than to achieve its intended result. Possessed of the world's largest force under arms and, thanks to geographically circumscribed strategic objectives, possessed as well of superior interior lines, the P.R.C. can afford a patient military modernization effort. By continuing to play the United States and the Soviet Union off against each other, it will buy itself time until the late 1990s when, with the cessation of British rule in Hong Kong, it will be in a much stronger position—militarily, economically, and politically—to attempt to regain its other lost territories (most notably Taiwan). Depending on the course of U.S.-P.R.C. relations, the coming decade may bear witness to what previously would have been impossible: an exchange of overtures, and perhaps the initiation of a more formal relationship, between Taiwan and the Soviet Union.

Second-order threats will come in a variety of forms. First will be those states with incipient nuclear capabilities whose behavior is sufficiently unstable or provocative as to make the use or threatened use of nuclear weapons for purposes of intimidation or coercion a distinct possibility. These states include India, Pakistan, Argentina, Iran, Iraq, Libya, and possibly even South Africa. Second will be those states with inordinately large and active military establishments whose behavior toward the United States and its allies is demonstrably hostile and likely to continue to be so. These include Cuba, North Korea, Syria, and Vietnam. Third will be those newly industrialized countries whose newfound economic prowess, competitive trade position, or possession of vital resources could produce acute economic tensions that might spill over into military confrontation. This group of states includes Brazil, Mexico, Chile, and, depending on extant circumstances, Taiwan. Fourth will be "stable" allies in whose countries the United States maintains key military facilities that could become increasingly vulnerable to persistent political unrest. These allies include Greece, Turkey, the Philippines, and Spain.

Third-order threats will warrant relatively less concern and preparation but should receive at least a modicum of attention. These will include not only the remainder of the Third World—where variegated forms of interstate and intrastate conflicts can erupt almost instantaneously—but also nonstate actors with newly possessed military capabilities (e.g., private armies sponsored by multinational corporations). Most important, however, third-order threats may include any of a number of current U.S. "allies" who, by virtue of their established positions of independence vis-à-vis the United States, could act unilaterally in a manner that is deleterious, and even hostile, to vital American interests. France, Japan, Israel, and Saudi Arabia fall into this category.

In the final analysis, any attempt to identify the entire range of possible threats to U.S. security, however desirable, is doomed to futility. I would be just as logical, for example, to include in the list of possible threats the likes of Nicaragua, Angola, Laos, the Yemens, or any number of other states. Transient allegiances and the floating nature of coalitions will produce numerous changes in friends and adversaries between now and the year 2000. Ultimately, leadership succession will determine who is friend and who is foe, especially where charismatic leaders are involved; who can say with any confidence what will happen when Castro, Khomeini, Qaddafi, Marcos, and King Hussein pass from the scene? Moreover, even where shared technology or doctrine produces similarities among threats, unique social, cultural, and historical factors will dictate that each threat be dealt with on its own terms.

THE NATURE OF CONFLICT

The exact course of the future will be neither totally determinate nor indeterminate. Much will depend on how the United States responds to evolving circumstances and whether or not these responses are anticipatative or reactive. On the other hand, much of what happens will be more or less independent of U.S. action or inaction. The peculiar interactions of seemingly unrelated events may sometimes assume the random characteristics of colliding subatomic particles. And other state and nonstate actors, sometimes in pursuit of their perceived self-interest, sometimes accidentally, will do things that defy American influence. For example, can it be said with any certainty that even drastic (and largely unpalatable) measures by the United States could influence the idiosyncratic behavior of a Khomeini or a Qaddafi? Or can we predict confidently that the Soviet economy will be responsive to external market forces?

Nonetheless, the confluence of particular threats and environmental conditions will create situations that contain the seeds of conflict. The extent and manner of involvement of various actors will dictate both the form and intensity of the conflicts that emerge. Figure 1 provides a framework for identifying the general dimensions of conflict as a function of the actors involved.

Situations involving two or more first-order powers promise to be global in potential scope—high-intensity conflagrations that could involve theater and/or strategic nuclear exchanges.[19] Not only is the number of such possibilities small to begin with, but the magnitude of associated costs and risks is so high that confrontations at this level will be repressed and supplanted by less direct, less provocative forms of competition. Direct confrontation between any two elements of the so-called bigpower triangle—the United States, the Soviet Union, and the People's Republic of China—will remain a remote possibility, not because of any rapprochement (such as some have seen emerging from the ephemeral warming of Chinese attitudes toward both the United States and the Soviet Union), but because of a mutual recognition by all parties that any such conflict could result only in a level of devastation that would leave the uninvolved member of the triangle at a distinct strategic advantage.[20] Thus, the relationship will continue to be characterized by fluctuating periods of wary antagonism and manipulative seduction. Only marginally more likely will be a conflict between the Soviet Union and Japan. Even if relations between the United States and Japan were to deteriorate markedly, innate Soviet caution would mitigate the temptation to undertake anything more aggressive than the threats and intimidation in which the Soviets now engage.

Situations involving first-order and second-order powers or, more likely, two or more second-order powers probably will be mid-to high-intensity affairs involving advanced military technology but containable within local or regional bounds. In the former instances, it is highly improbable that the Soviets will risk engaging a strong second-order possessing modern technology unless an accidental, catalytic situation draws them in. In contrast, the P.R.C. could be involved in any number of conflicts with Vietnam, India, Taiwan, or even Hong Kong. To the extent that the Chinese succeed in lulling the United States into a false sense of calm, due to the atmosphere of bilateral cordiality that is emerging, U.S. leaders will be neutralized by their own sense of contradiction over such seemingly inscrutable behavior.

Considerably more likely to occur will be situations involving third-order powers. Such situations will be mid-to low-intensity affairs at the conventional and subconventional levels. Because of the large number of third-order powers in the world, as well as the wide array of interactions possible at this level, this genre of conflict will remain extremely prevalent—continuing a trend that has been in evidence throughout the post-World War II era.

Finally, internal and prevalent form of conflict, due to the ease with which such affairs can be initiated, their containability and immense variety of forms and the fact that their conduct does not depend on a large sustaining resource base.

For the most part, there will be no identifiabel geographical pattern to these conflicts that would allow the United States to focus its responses. Outside of Europe, which maintains a degree of uniqueness because of the array of military forces deployed there, the propensities for conflict will be distributed across Asia, Africa, Latin America, and the Middle East. Considering that America's vital interests, though differing in content, command more or less equivalent priority in each of these regions, there will be a confounding of the already intractable policy dilemma of how best to correlate U.S. capabilities and commitments. As a result, conflicts will, of necessity, continue to be dealt with on a case-by-case basis as they occur.

Beyond these basic conflict patterns, it is instructive to look at the specific types or levels of conflict that will emerge in terms of their probability of occurrence and their criticality (i.e., the associated social, psychological, political, military, and economic costs and benefits).

A well-recognized problem confronting military planners is whether preparedness should be a function primarily of the prevalence or the potential impact of a particular type of conflict. One respected authority who has acknowledged the problem is former Under Secretary of Defense Robert W. Komer, who reflects the propensity of most planners today:

"The more likely contingencies are in the volatile Third World, . . . but it is risky to fall prey to this "likelihood fallacy." By the same token, nuclear conflict is the least likely contingency of all; should we therefore not bother to maintain strong nuclear deterrent capabilities? Just because the likelihood of direct threats to our most vital interests is relatively low is no reason for not continuing to invest heavily in keeping them low."[21]

A comparison between current levels of U.S. preparedness and the expected nature of future conflict (Figure 2) highlights some startling asymmetries in this regard that could have telling consequences.

Strategic nuclear conflict

Strategic nuclear conflict is highly unlikely to occur before the end of the century, notwithstanding the protestations of nuclear freeze advocates and others. On the whole, Americans have continued, throughout the postwar period, to subscribe to the belief that nuclear war will not occur, although the size of the majority having that opinion has dwindled in recent years.[22] Public opinion on this issue derives largely from understandable emotional factors that tend to obscure rational assessment. Leading British military historian Professor Michael Howard has offered the following contrasting judgment:

"I think that the development of nuclear weapons has given us a chance for the indefinite future of preventing the outbreak of major war, at least between powers armed with nuclear forces. One can't say, of course, that it will never happen. But I think that the possibilities of major war are far more remote as a result of the existence of nuclear weapons than they ever were in the past." [23]

Unquestionably, because of the social, psychological, and economic costs involved, strategic nuclear warfare is the most critical level of conflict. The near-universal agreement that exists on this point has produced a necessary degree of caution and safeguards by those who possess nuclear weapons, so that the probabilities that such conflict will occur have been effectively mitigated. As Harlan Cleveland has noted: "The U.S.-USSR strategic standoff . . . is paradoxically the most stable element in world politics." [24]

Relative to the probability that strategic nuclear conflict will occur, the United States is overprepared, although relative to the criticality of the phenomenon, overpreparedness is a meaningless term. It is difficult to support the argument, however, that greater preparedness would make conflict at this level any less likely or, conversely, that a marginal degradation would materially increase its likelihood.

Theater nuclear conflict

Conflict is only slightly more likely at the theater nuclear level, especially if one thinks primarily in terms of a NATO-Warsaw Pact crisis in Europe. However, the spread of nuclear weapons and the prospects for mid- to high-intensity interstate conflicts in other parts of the world create numerous possibilities elsewhere. Little has happened to change so-called expert opinion since a group of eminent scholars convened in late 1975 to address the question, "Nuclear War by 1999?" During the course of that discussion, George Rathjens of MIT speculated that

". . . if there is to be nuclear war, it will begin with one of the emerging nuclear powers, where command and control systems may not be as refined or the government as stable, as ours. . . . My guess is that the first one will be relatively limited, begun by a country with a fairly small population using nuclear weapons probably against its neighbors." [25]

Similarly, this level of conflict is only slightly less critical than strategic nuclear conflict. The essence of the debate, of course, revolves around the question of whether a theater nuclear engagement can be contained and limited. The most convincing logic suggests that the first use of nuclear weapons outside the European theater (by far, the most plausible scenario) would be such a significant precedent that it would mobilize counteraction sufficiently strong (e.g., the United States and the Soviet Union acting in temporary concert) to ensure containment.

Here, too, the United States is overprepared relative to the probability of occurrence. The greater U.S. preparedeness at this level than at the strategic nuclear level is attributable to the considerable overlap that exists between forces, weapons, and doctrine having dual conventional-theater nuclear uses.

Conventional conflict

Conventional conflict is significantly more likely to occur than nuclear conflict, not only because of the amount of conventional armaments around the globe but also because it is the traditional form of warfare. The pervasiveness of conventional conflict reflects the growing size and sophistication of military forces possessed by second- and third-order powers with a demonstrated propensity for interstate conflict.

At this level, criticality and probability of occurrence first come into balance. The psychological "firebreak" that separates conventional from nuclear conflict—to say nothing of the ultimate destructive potential of the latter—produces a measurable decrease in criticality. Others argue, however, that this distinction has dimmed considerably. British military historian John Keegan, for one, notes:

"What is not generally perceived is how much the effects of conventional war now overlap with those of nuclear war. A high-intensity conventional war and a low-intensity nuclear war might inflict very much the same level of damage on any given piece of inhabited landscape." [26]

Nonetheless, the tacit recognition by most authorities that the use of even one nuclear weapon would be an act of extraordinary psychological dimensions reinforces the already ingrained bureaucratic propensity to prepare for the war we want rather than for the one we will get. The preponderance of U.S. forces and weapons, therefore, are conventional. It is the only level of conflict for which we have a fully codified and viable (albeit controversial) doctrine. In short, the United States is very much overprepared for conventional conflict. Those who argue otherwise (including proponents of the "no-first-use" nuclear policy) assume a NATO-Warsaw Pact confrontation—a low-likelihood contingency for which our principal objective is to deter rather than to fight. our experience to date in this regard has been a successful one, from which the future is unlikely to deviate.[27]

Subconventional conflict

This level of conflict—which includes everything from shows of force to insurgencies to terrorism—is by far the most likely to occur, for it is within this domain that the relatively weak can test, and attempt to gain concessions from, the strong.

Shows of force will continue to be a major, low-risk option for demonstrating power, especially by the first-order powers. Such tacit threat-making, having become a fully institutionalized instrument of power politics in the nuclear era, will be even more prevalent in the future than in the past.

Insurgency will remain the principal vehicle for growing revolutionary movements, particularly those with the patience to endure a protracted struggle. Whatever may be the actual motives that animate individual insurgent movements, the continued existence of unpopular regimes in politically unstable and economically maldeveloped societies will provide a necessary pretext for the sustainment of such conflicts.

Terrorism will stand alone as the predominant form of conflict over the next two decades. The accelerating trends of recent years do not begin to capture the magnitude of what lies ahead; if anything, these trends have merely provided a sharp stimulus to more frequent and more violent acts of terrorism. The growing appeal of this "warfare on the cheap" is its high return on investment, for invariably the impact of most terrorist acts is disproportionate to the effort required by their militarily insignificant perpetrators. Lebanon in 1983, where only four individual terrorists killed 349 "infidels" (including 264 Americans), is a startling case in point.

Generally speaking, terrorism of the future will be characterized by four major attributes:

It will be increasingly violent and concentrated against human targets. American diplomats, businessmen, and military personnel stationed overseas will be especially vulnerable.

It will be directed more against Americans and become more prevalent within the United States. In the words of journalist Claire Sterling: "I am sure that the United States will, as always, be the principal target of terrorism, because it is the most powerful country in the Western world. And that is the one, in the end, that they're all after."

It will come increasingly under state sponsorship, thereby lending credence to the observation of DePaul University Professor M. Cherif Bassiouni: "The battleground between superpowers has shifted from major military confrontations to low-level violence strategies." [28]

Largely as a function of the access to resources provided by state sponsorship, the first bona fide instance of terrorism involving the use, or threatened use, of weapons of mass destruction (nuclear, chemical, or biological) will occur.

Two factors in particular will hamper efforts to deal effectively with terrorism. The first will the sheer number of terrorist groups to be identified, monitored, and countered—a much more formidable task than dealing with formal states and their traditional military establishments. The hundreds of guerrilla and terrorist groups involved in thousands of acts of violence in the last two decades alone portend a dramatic rise in the number of parties willing to resort to such violence to achieve their ends.

A second inhibiting factor will be the growing fanaticism of many groups, thus making it less likely that traditional sanctions will have the desired effects. Typical is the rhetoric of one radical Moslem leader: "We are willing to be killed in the name of God and in defense of our country and of our dignity."

Finally, the link that has emerged between illicit drug traffic terrorism will be strengthened. This dangerous trend holds two major implications. For one thing, the methods, routes, and support infrastructure for terrorism and drug trafficking will become increasingly congruent, thereby producing a degree of coordinated efficiency that will demand equally well-coordinated countermeasures. On a more ominous note, illegal drugs seem likely to assume more significance as a mainstream weapon of terrorism, especially where political upheaval and social disintegraton are sought. There is a great danger that others will follow in Castro's recent footsteps by encouraging the smuggling of drugs into the United States to "create mayhem" and to raise funds for revolutionary movements.[29]

Judged only on the individual incidents, subconventional conflict is appreciably less critical than other levels of conflict; however, in their totality, given a degree of orchestration by hostile powers, such incidents may have an utterly debilitating effect on the U.S. strategic posture. It is the cumulative effect of extraordinarily large numbers of incidents over time that produces a degree of comparative hypercriticality.

It is no secret that the United States is woefully ill-prepared to wage subconventional conflict effectively. While we have a clear measure of proficiency in the use of shows of force, two factors—the widespread availability of the most sophisticated military technologies, and the "fishbowl effects" of media saturation—have produced a vulnerability that has virtually negated the efficacy of gunboat diplomacy. Our failed experience in Vietnam was irrefutable proof of our lack of affinity for insurgency or counterinsurgency, and the American military's subsequent disregard of the lessons of that conflict has only reinforced this much-neglected operational dimension. Similarly, in the counterterrorism arena, recent events have demonstrated rather conclusively a less-than-impressive capability. The findings of the Long Commission, appointed by Secretary of Defense Caspar Weinberger to investigate the October 1983 terrorist truck bomb attack that claimed the lives of 241 U.S. Marines at Beirut airport, is a telling indictment:

"The United States, and specifically the Department of Defense, is inadequately prepared to deal with this threat. Much needs to be done, on an urgent basis, to prepare U.S. military forces to defend against and counter terrorist warfare."[30]

Conflict in space

Space will be the strategic arena of the twenty-first century, at least for the advanced industrial nations, for whom it will represent a welcome respite from the nettlesome frustrations of terrorism. Despite the surfeit of publicity generated over the Reagan administration's so-called Star Wars initiative and the early rush by both the United States and the Soviet Union to fill the phantom, "ASAT (antisatellite) gap," sufficient technological capabilities will not be fielded in time for space to be an identifiable theater of conflict before the end of the century.

In the near term, therefore, the emphasis will be on the attainment of marginal ASAT advantages, the intent and the effect being to hinder satellite reconnaissance, early warning, and navigation capabilities, particularly as they contribute to the nuclear balance. The first quarter of the twenty-first century will produce beam-energy weapons, which, if properly employed and publicized, will be perceived as tendering nuclear weapons obsolete over time. In the longer term, we shall witness fuller exploitation of space: lunar (and perhaps other planetary) development, the eventual emplacement of permanent space colonies, and true Star Wars technologies such as ultrapowerful directed-energy weapons that can destroy targets at distances of thousands of miles, hypersonic aircraft, and even gravity-collapser beams that can turn entire cities into black holes.

For the Soviets, space will provide the ideal arena for exercising their propensity for strategic indirection. For the United States, it will provide a pristine "battlefield" far removed from the inhibiting collateral effects that produce significant sociopolitical repercussions in traditional warfare. The virtual elimination of the human element from this type of conflict will make space a highly desirable—and thus prevalent—arena for exercising power and resolving disputes on earth. The result will be a futuristic reversion to the gladiatorial duals of the distant past.

IMPLICATIONS FOR MILITARY REFORM

The future offers both difficulties and challenges for the United States. Clearly conflict, in all its guises and colorations, is here to stay—at least for the foreseeable future. We are a long way, in fact, from achieving what Kenneth Boulding has called a "stable peace." But the situation is far from hopeless, nor is it beyond influence. We might take succor from the aplomb (or at least the rhetoric) of French General Ferdinand Foch, in a September 1914 message to Marshal Joseph Joffre during the first of the battles of the Marne: "Hard pressed on my right. My center is yielding. Impossible to maneuver. Situation excellent. I am attacking."

The implications of such a future for military reform—and, more generally, for reform of the larger national security establishment—are many. At the most fundamental level, we must undertake a serious reevaluation of some of our most cherished values to determine how appropriate they are in the face of emerging global conditions and threats. For example, are out traditional attitudes toward growth, plenty, and even stability relevant to a future of increasing global interdependence that arguably may turn out to be the era of limits that some have feared? Even more difficult is the question of whether our attitudes toward sacrifice, the value of human life, and civil liberties equip us to deal effectively with the horrors of terrorism. Are our only choices either to turn the other check in moral rectitude or to turn the country into a police state?

No less important is the need to consider certain adjustments in our overall strategic orientation. We must make more sophisticated use of the many elements of power at our disposal (diplomatic, economic, and even moral) to support and complement the application of military force, aknowledging the utility of force under particular circumstances but recognizing that power often can be employed effectively without resort to force. We must be more sensitive to the dynamics of deterrence, particularly as deterrence constitutes an effective response to the more critical, but less likely, forms of conflict that confront us. We must appreciate that some conceptual notions, though ostensibly esoteric, have significant practical implications: (1) that deterrence, to be totally effective, must be operative at all levels of potential conflict; (2) that the selective application of force at lower levels of conflict actually may enhance deterrence at higher levels; and (3) that what contributes to combat effectiveness, or one's war-fighting capacity, may not necessarily contribute to improved deterrence. We also must improve our ability to "manage" public perceptions, both domestic and foreign, so as to exploit the symbolic aspects of power. Finally, we must formulate and be prepared to execute a strategy that is sufficiently robust to accommodate the need for selective engagement or disengagement from various alliance relationships. No longer will we be able to expect bona fide alliance burden-sharing in the absence of an effective coalition strategy, but we must be chary about overdependence on coalitions as the foundation of our strategy.

There are issues of organizational effectiveness and efficiency that also demand our attention. Briefly stated, we need greater executive-legislative, interagency, and interservice cooperation and coordination so as to provide more coherent policy and to eliminate wasteful redundancy and competition. The most obvious vehicles for effecting such changes are structural (e.g., the elevation of the president's assistant for national security affairs to cabinet rank or the complete reorganization of the armed services along functional lines). The less obvious, more difficult, and more time-consuming intermediate step is the intellectual adjustment that must be made by all parties concerned if we are to overcome the hidebound parochialism that has impeded such measures to date.

At the operational level, a number of changes merit more detailed examination. We need more flexible, adaptable force structures designed for a broad range of conflict environments—creative alternatives, in other words, that will alleviate the necessity of having to choose between heavy forces that can function effectively only against an armor-intensive threat or light forces that can survive only against insurgents and terrorists. This flexibility will require the concurrent formulation of a more dynamic, comprehensive doctrine that accommodates all levels of conflict in integrated fashion. It also suggests the need to build these force structures around mixed technologies (in lieu of sole reliance on advanced technologies) appropriate to specific threats and missions. A related need, given the potentially volatile and hostile environment facing the United States in the years ahead, is for enhanced force projection capabilities that will allow us more effectively to exercise global "presence" without undue reliance on potentially vunerable overseas bases.

We must also rethink our approach to threat assessment. Although the Soviet Union will remain our most formidable adversary, we must disabuse ourselves of the notion that we face a monolithic threat orchestrated out of Moscow. We must instead recognize the nature and magnitude of a growing number of independent threats, which, if not dealt with effectively on their own terms, surely will create conditions that the Soviets can exploit to our strategic disadvantage. Likewise, in an age where expectations and avenues of fulfillment remain frustratingly incommensurate for many, we must be more sensitive to the near-inevitability of various revolutionary movements. The lessons of Iran and Nicaragua are a sobering reminder that repressive incumbent regimes, even if staunchly anti-Communist or anti-Soviet, may not provide the strongest anchors for the United States in a sea of unrest. We therefore must be better attuned to emerging social and political developments and be willing to shift our priorities (and, if necessary, our loyalties) accordingly to ensure the attainment of broader strategic goals. To do so, we must, among other things, place increased emphasis on further enhancing our human intelligence collection capabilities and markedly expanding our store of foreign area expertise through accelerated programs of language and cultural training.

These ideas bear no stamp of originality, nor do they penetrate beyond the veneer of generalization. To do otherwise would be inconsistent with, and unsupportable by, the necessarily abbreviated nature of this tour d'horizon of the future. However, the future can be met successfully only if fundamental principles, such as these, first are agreed to before we embark on the more concrete, utilitarian measures that have tended to set the terms of debate over military reform thus far.

Some 55 percent of world trade is invoiced in dollars. Around 80 percent of all international bank loans are denominated in dollars. Central banks hold about 75 percent of their foreign-currency reserves as dollars. Because U.S. financial markets are the freest and biggest, what happens to its interest rates, share prices, etc., has an irresistible pull on the rest of the world. [9] There is a self-deluding tendency, especially in the United States, to view the current oil glut, the disarray within OPEC, and the continuing dependency of states (Mexico, Nigeria, and others) on oil revenues as setting the tone for the future. However, given the volatility of the oil market, the low likelihood of large-scale conversion to alternative energy sources by the year 2000, and the declining tolerance for sacrifice within prosperous, advanced societies, it is not difficult to imagine any of a variety of circumstances (e.g., terrorist incidents, unexpected regime changes, interstate conflicts between oil-producing states, Soviet adventurism, or merely petulant behavior by oil producers bent on high-stakes international arm twisting) percipitating future (seemingly irrational) oil-related crises. For two brief, but authoritative, arguments in support of this contention, see Frank Zarb, "True or False: Energy Planning Is Possible," Washington Post, 25 August 1983, p. A21; and Daniel Yergin, "2 Views on Oil," Washington Post, 29 April 1984, p. E21.

[10] Forty-four percent of the American population will be in the forty or older bracket by the year 2000. South Korea's median age will not reach thirty until sometime between 2000 and 2010, while Brazil's median age will be only about twenty-seven as late as 2025.

[11] The problem will be much worse in the United States (a drop of 25 percent) than in the Soviet Union (a drop of 16 percent); still worse will be the situation in Britain and West Germany, where available manpower is expected to fall 50 percent by 1990.

[12] Increasingly, in other words, policy formulation (especially within the military sphere) will become the preserve of individuals whose expertise derives principally from academic credentials rather than from "the sting of battle." The result could be a pervasive degree of emotional disengagement that produces unrealistic, historically unsound, culturally insensitive, and even socially divisive policies.

However, petty jealousies, conflicting objectives, and ethnic, cultural, and linguistic barriers are likely to preclude this amalgamation.

[19] For purposes of this analysis, first-order powers are considered to be the member states of the NATO and Warsaw Pact alliances, Japan, the P.R.C., and Australia. Second-order powers include the various second-order threats identified previously, as well as such others as Israel, South Korea, and Thailand. Obviously, any such scheme of this nature suffers from inherent flaws, but these should not detract from the otherwise helpful insights that can be gained from such constructs.

[20] For an alternative perspective, see Edward N. Luttwak, The Grand Strategy of the Soviet Empire (New York: St. Martin's Press, 1983), who postulates (not very compellingly) that considerable potential exists for the Soviets to launch an attack against the P.R.C. in the not-too-distant future.

[22] The measure of public uncertainty and ambivalence on this issue is reflected in polls taken before and after the November 1983 showing of the ABC television drama "The Day After." Before the show, 65 percent of viewers felt that a nuclear war between the United States and the Soviet Union was very or somewhat likely by the year 2000. After the show, 63 percent felt the same way! ("Fallout from a TV Attack," Time, 5 December 1983, p. 39.

[27] As contentious as this claim is, it is shared even within the NATO alliance. For example, West Germany's "White Book 1983 on the Security of the FRG" contended that, despite unfavorable developments for the West in the military balance of forces, at the moment it can be assumed that the danger of a war in Europe "is not present."

[28] The precise role of the Soviet Union will continue to be a source of serious contention between those who argue that the Soviets "mastermind" or exercise central direction over global terrorism; those who maintain that they merely provide support in the form of weapons, training, finance, and propaganda; and those who see little clear evidence of Soviet control. For one side of this debate, see Ray S. Cline and Yonah Alexander, Terrorism: The Soviet Connection (New York: Crane, Russak, 1984).

[29] Of the 125,000 Cuban immigrants who came ashore in the 1980 Mariel boatlift, up to 40,000 reportedly were veterans of Castro's jails and mental hospital, while another 10,000 were considered highly dangerous or criminally insane. Additionally, some assessments have suggested, up to 3,000 were secret agents sent to spy on fellow exiles and to run a vast underground network for addicting Americans to drugs; as many as 400 apparently were assigned solely to narcotics trafficking. DR. KING BRINGS OUT THE BEST IN US

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, recently our Nation celebrated the first national holiday honoring Martin Luther King, Jr. There was much debate over the merits of another Federal holiday and its cost. But I believe the services and activities held to honor Dr. King's memory made it an unqualified success. Schoolchildren born after Dr. King's death are learning about a day when whites and blacks could not sit together at a lunch counter for a simple hamburger. They are learning about Dr. King's dream for a just and opportunity-filled society. We have come a long way, but we have much yet to accomplish in our own country and also in the pressure we put on the white government in South Africa. In a column I write for newspapers in my State, I have related a personal experience with Dr. King during the second anniversary of the bus boycott in Montgomery, AL. I ask that the column be reprinted in the RECORD.

The column follows:

KING BRINGS OUT THE BEST IN US

(By U.S. Senator Paul Simon of Illinois)

The United States is a much different nation—and a much better nation—because the man whose birthday we just celebrated, Martin Luther King Jr., walked among us.

He did not change the nation alone, and we still have much to accomplish, but he set a moral tone. He led. He forced us to re-examine practices taken for granted that were gross denials of the rights of our fellow citizens.

He and I were only two months apart in age.

I first met Martin Luther King, when I was a young legislator. He asked me to speak at the second anniversary of the bus boycott in Montgomery, Ala., at a meeting held in his home church, the Dexter Avenue Baptist Church.

He had a speaking engagement in Chicago the day before I was scheduled to speak in Montgomery. We met at the St. Louis airport and then flew together to Altanta, where he met some members of his family, and then went to Montgomery.

A little thing happened at the airport that says something about the times and the man.

After our plane landed at the Atlanta airport, Dr. King and I decided to use the rest room. I suddenly found myself facing signs: "Colored Men's Room" and "White Men's Room." I hesitated for an instance and Dr. King laughed and said, "This is not the issue to fight over."

I went into the white men's room, but felt dirty. Cheap. In a small way I was participating in something I knew was wrong.

I spent two days in Montgomery with Dr. King and others who were struggling for such elemental things as the right of all citizens to vote.

Martin Luther King lived long enough to see that battle won, as well as the battle to sit anywhere on a bus, to enter any restaurant or hotel, to be treated with simple dignity. He was still fighting battles when he was killed, but he saw some great victories.

We have made progress as a nation, and part of that progress is because of this unusual leader who labored among us, and we have made progress because he received support from Americans of all races and religions and national backgrounds.

But didn't he have flaws? Of course he did. So did George Washington and Abraham Lincoln. Sometimes heroes who are in our midst do not seem like real heroes because we still retain this image that they must be saints, people with no imperfections. There aren't such creatures around!

There are, however, a few people who bring out the best in us. Martin Luther King was one of those.

How should we honor him today?

By continuing to fight for the less fortunate.

It is easy for society to ignore them, just as it was a few decades ago.

There are people who need jobs, who need a quality education, who need dentures but can't afford them—people all around us with a host of needs.

Generally they do not want us simply to hand them things, but they do want justice and an opportunity.

That's what Martin Luther King fought for: A just and opportunity-filled society.●

PROTECTION OF TROPICAL FORESTS AND BIOLOGICAL DIVERSITY IN DEVELOPING COUNTRIES

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, I want to express my support for S. 1747 and S. 1748, which propose to amend the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 in order to protect tropical forests and biological diversity in developing countries. I am pleased to be a cosponsor of both measures which I believe address two very important global environmental issues.

Forests account for over 40 percent of the terrestrial ecosystems in tropical regions of the world and occupy an area of approximately 2 billion hectares. Slightly less than 1 billion hectares are open or dry forests while the remaining are closed or wet forests. Tropical forests are highly productive ecological systems. Either directly or indirectly they are responsible for providing life's necessities such as food, fuel, and building materials for the approximately 2 billion people who live in the tropics. They contain very high diversity of plant and animal species and are intricately related to soil, water, and biological resources.

Rapidly expanding human populations have placed intense pressure upon the natural resource base of tropical regions. Annual growth rates in these countries generally range from 2.0 to 3.5 percent which means that these populations are doubling every 20 to 35 years. According to a recent study by the Food and Agriculture Organization [FAO] of the United Nations, a loss in excess of 11 million hectares of tropical forests occurs each year. This loss is equivalent to an area five times the size of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts. Other studies, which include less than complete deforestation, project forest destruction at up to 20 million hectares per year. The primary reason for forest degradation is related to the everpresent need to provide sufficient food for the increasing numbers of humans and has resulted in the conversion of forest systems to agricultural and grazing areas. The high demand for fuel wood and timber products also accounts for significant resource degradation and destruction. In general, when tropical forests are cleared, the loss of natural vegetative cover leads to reduction of soil nutrients, erosion, increased runoff and flooding, siltation of surrounding freshwater ecosystems, and the loss of necessary habitat for plant and animal species. These conditions have been found throughout the forested tropical regions of the world.

Biological diversity refers to the number of different species of living organisms within a particular area. In general, high species diversity is indicative of complex, stable ecosystems while low species diversity is characteristic of simplified, less stable systems. Tropical forests traditionally represent highly productive, highly diverse ecological habitats. On a worldwide basis approximately 1.7 million species of plants and animals have been formally identified and classified. Most scientists working in the field of taxonomy believe that up to 10 times his number may exist with the majority residing in tropical forests. Organisms found in tropical regions tend to be very specialized in their ecological requirements because the constancy of environmental conditions allows for a decrease in niche size. Because of this specialization, these organisms generally do not adapt well when their habitats are disturbed. The degradation and destruction of tropical forests are believed to be responsible for the extinction of up to a thousand species per year.

From an ecological standpoint, the stable but delicate relationships in these systems are now changing. From a practical standpoint, the potential genetic reservior for new food crops, pharmaceuticals, and other valuable products is rapidly decreasing. The loss of biological diversity in these regions is occurring at an uprecendented rate and, according to most scientists, reaching critical proportions.

Forest degradation and subsequent loss of biological diversity are prevalent throughout regions of Africa where approximately 40 percent of the world's tropical forests are located. As a member of the Committee on Foreign Relations Subcommittee on African Affairs, I am particularly concerned about these conditions. Africa's population growth rate is the highest of any of the continents in the Earth's history. According to projections of the United Nations, if Africa continues along its present course of increase, its population will triple in approximately 50 years. The problems faced on this continent are critical and need immediate attention. The rain forests of West Africa, along the Atlantic coast, are decreasing at more than 5 percent annually. There is evidence that these forests play a vital role in recycling moisture that provides the base for rainfall in the sub-Saharan region which has experienced below average precipitation for the past 17 years. Increase in desertification is also accelerating at unprecedented levels south from the Saharan regions. Although the problem of deforestation in Africa is well known, programs of forest protection and reforestation are not keeping pace with the loss. A recent FAO study showed that the total area of deforestation exceeded that of purposeful reforestation by a 29-to-1 ratio.

Last fall, Lester Brown, Director of Worldwatch Institute and senior author of "Reversing Africa's Decline," testified before our subcommittee on the ecological deterioration and economic decline throughout most of the African continent. He contended that "reversing Africa's decline" could take place only by utilizing resource-based strategies. According to Mr. Brown, "beneath the urgent work of providing food and aid and resettling families displaced by famine, a long-term strategy of environmental restoration is essential to reversing recent trends." S. 1747 and S. 1748 work toward accomplishing this restoration.

These two important bills provide encouragement and support for programs and projects that protect tropical forests and biological diversity in developing countries. They require that U.S. sponsored activities under the Foreign Assistance Act are based upon careful analysis of their impact upon these resources and call for the denial of programs and projects that degrade these resources. They also require annual reports on the implementation of these sections of the Act. I am convinced that S. 1747 and S. 1748 provide the mechanisms necessary to make progress on the protection of tropical forests and biological diversity in developing countries.●

DEATH OF AUDREY WOOD

● Mr. MOYNIHAN. Mr. President, the death of Audrey Wood, the distinguished New York theatrical agent, was a sad event for so many who knew her and admired her work. She was loved and widely respected in the theater world of New York and indeed across the Nation.

Mr. President, The New York Times recently printed a very moving profile of Audrey Wood's life and death. I commend ths article to the attention of the Senate, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD along with her obituary of December 28 1885.

The material follows:

[From the New York Times, Dec. 28, 1985]

AUDREY WOOD IS DEAD AT 80; A LEADING THEATRICAL AGENT

(By Herbert Mitgang

Audrey Wood, the doyenne of theatrical agents who represented many of Americans' leading playwrights, died Friday at the Carrolton Nursing Home in Fairfield, Conn. She was 80 years old and had been in a coma since suffering a stroke in 1981.

As head of the drama department of international Creative Management, the artists' and authors' agency, Miss Wood represented dozens of playwrights, including Robert Anderson, Brian Friel, Arthur Kopit, Eve Merrian and Murray Schisgal. She also handled the theatrical estates of William Inge, Preston Jones, Carson McCullers and Yukio Mishima. She represented Tennessee Williams for most of his career.

The title of her 1981 autobiography, "Represented by Audrey Wood," written with Max Wilk, reflected her oft-expressed attitude toward her work. Miss Wood, who exuded an air of quiet dignity and confidence, considered the word "agent" somewhat commercial and undignified, and her devotion to clients and her tirelessness in their behalf were legendary.

BORN INTO THEATRICAL FAMILY

She suffered the stroke on April 30, 1981, outside the Royalton Hotel on West 44th Street, which had been her Manhattan home since the mid-1930's. She also had a house in Westport, Conn.

Miss Wood was born in New York into a theatrical family. Her father, William H. Wood, was the first manager of the Palace Theater. Even before graduating from George Washington High School in upper Manhattan, she began reading plays for her father.

Joining the Century Play Company in her early 20' she rose to become head of its play department. In 1937, she opened her own agency and continued her lifetime search for talented play wrights.

In 1937, Miss Wood joined the successful actors' agent, William Liebling, in their own firm. They were married in 1938. The Liebling-Wood agency became a strong force in the theater and in films, with Miss Wood representing playwrights and Mr. Liebling, actors and directors.

OPEN TO NEW IDEAS

The first play they represented jointly was in 1937 hit farce "Room Service," written by Jack Murray and Allen Boretz and directed by George Abbott.

Liebling-Wood was bought by the Music Corporation of America in 1954, and Miss Wood continued to represent playwrights under the firm's new name, International Creative Management.

Her reputation continued to grow among producers, playwrights and actors; she was open to new ideas and forms on and off Broadway and in the regional theater. It was said that if Miss Wood recommended a play to a producer, half the battle was over. An admiring producer once said, "Hell, you can't do business with her, she's too honest."

Among her playwrights, her style was legendary. She called some of them by their last names, as if not wishing to intrude on their privacy. Reporting good news, she would say, "Are you sitting down, darling?" But she could also inquire quietly, "How are you fixed for money?"

HONORED AT KENNEDY CENTER

Miss Wood served on the board of the American National Theater and Academy, the American Theater Wing and the New Dramatists Committee. She conducted a course in playwriting at Wesleyan University and workshops on several other campuses.

Although unable to be present, she received the Richard L. Coe award at the Kennedy Center in Washington in October 1981 for her contributions to the theater.

Other honors came her way in recent years. A scholarship fund for aspiring dramatists was established in her name at the Yale School of Drama and Repertory Theater in 1982. And in October 1984, a stage at the Jack Lawrence Theater at 359 West 48th Street was dedicated as the Audrey Wood Theater.

Mr. Liebling died in 1969. The couple did not have any children.

A memorial service is being planned.

THE LIFE AND DEATH OF AN AGENT

(By Samuel G. Freedman)

The last act of Audrey Wood's life was long, ambiguous and wholly dissatisfying, the sort of thing the legendary agent never would have countenanced in a play. But life did not imitate art in Audrey Wood's case and her death last Friday at the age of 80, after more than four years in a coma, left friends, colleagues and clients with a mixture of relief and unfocused rage.

All of them threw bouguets, too, to the indomitable little woman who called grown authors "young man" and always wore a hat. They remembered her for tenacity and tact, for devotion to dramatists like Tennessee Williams and William Inge.

"Oliver Garrett, a playwright, once said, 'Audrey is small, but you can't knock her down,'" recalled Max Wilk, the co-author of Miss Wood's autobiography, "Represented by Audrey Wood," "That's the obituary I think she would've wanted."

SUPPORTED RIGHT TO DIE

Such sweet memories, though, were recounted amid the frustration of friends who knew that one of Miss Wood's few passions outside of the theater was the right-to-die issue, who knew that she belonged to the Euthanasia Society. Her long demise in a Fairfield, Conn., nursing home was, for them, the bitterest of ironies.

"One feels grief at her passing, but it's mostly a relief and a kind of anger that this could've gone on so long," said Arthur Kopit, one of her clients. "This woman was so clear about what she wanted. No one was more explicit."

Morton Gottlieb, the producer, was one of many friends who made the passage from hope to despair in the years after Miss Wood suffered a stroke on April 30, 1981. "I used to go and visit her when she was in the coma," he recalled, "and in her first year I always believed she'd come out of it. I'd tell her all the news, because I believed she was taking it in. But in the past few years, people told me, Forget it.'"

EMBODIED BROADWAY'S HEYDAY

A memorial service for Miss Wood has been scheduled for 11:30 A.M. on Jan. 15 at the Shubert Theater, and what will be mourned, what is already being mourned, is not only Audrey Wood the person but also a Broadway heyday that she helped to embody. At a time when new American playwrights could make their careers on Broadway, Miss Wood found, shaped and delivered many of the finest—Williams, Inge, Kopit, Carson McCullers, Robert Anderson, Murray Schisgal and Preston Jones.

"Audrey represented a whole world of playwrights, a whole world of theater," Mr. Anderson said. "She was a condition of our life for so many years."

Miss Wood was almost literally a child of the theater. The daughter of William H. Wood, the manager of the Palace Theater, she grew up back-stage and as a teen-ager began reading plays for her father. By the late 1930's, she had founded an agency with her husband to be, William Liebling. Soon after, she signed a little-known author named Thomas Lanier Williams.

"She was a divining rod for talent," said Eli Wallach, the actor. "Unlike a lot of agents, she never boasted about who she discovered. She just found someone and coddled and nursed and nurtured their talent."

Miss Wood was an editor, a sounding board and at times a surrogate mother for her clients. "It all boils down to caring," said Flora Roberts, a prominent agent for playwrights and authors and a protegee of Miss Wood. "Audrey taught me that you have to go with your faith in a writer, because it's faith in yourself for choosing them."

FASCINATION WITH LIFE

Miss Wood had fallings-out with her clients. Inge and Williams both left her, blaming her for their flagging fortunes. Although Williams's departure wounded her, the agent Milton Goldman recalls, Miss Wood helped the playwright find another representative. And Williams acknowledged his debt to Miss Wood even after their parting.

But until her stroke, Miss Wood never lost her fascination with life, whether it meant crossing the country in search of a new playwright or maintaining a first-date excitement in her marriage to Mr. Liebling.

"I remember a dress rehearsal of 'The Mundy Scheme' at the Royale," Mr. Gottlieb said. "It was 1969, about three weeks before Mr. Liebling died. And in the break between scenes, there they were, hugging and kissing in the dark, like teen-agers in the balcony of the movie theater. You could burst out in tears in just remembering."●

THE REDEVELOPMENT OF UNION STATION MOVES FORWARD

● Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. President, during the recess, the Department of Transportation entered into a development agreement with Union Station Venture. This agreement will provide for the reconstruction of Union Station at the edge of Capitol Hill here in Washington, DC.

This is grand news.

I congratulate Secretary Dole, as well as Keith Kelly, the president of the Union Station Redevelopment Corp.

The work to revive Union Station is important to the Capitol Hill area, to the city of Washington, and to the Northeast rail corridor. It will hold great importance for the tens of thousands of Americans who come to visit their Capitol each month, offering new restaurants and shops.

I look forward to the early awarding of the construction contract.

To give my colleagues a better idea of the project, I ask that information on the work that has occurred, an outline of the redevelopment contract, and a recent article from the Washington Post be printed at this point in the RECORD.

The material follows:

MILESTONES BY UNION STATION REDEVELOPMENT CORP., IN ADMINISTERING THE UNION STATION REDEVELOPMENT ACT OF 1981

Corporation staffed—February 1984.

Preferred developer selected—Union Station Venture August 1984.

Architect selected Harry Weese & Associates—August 1984.

Construction manager selected Gilbane/Smoot Joint Venture—November 1984.

Emergency repairs in Union Station A. A. Beiro Contractor—$1,000,000—completed—November 1984.

Schematic Design for Union Station approved—February 1985.

Initial design reviews before NCPC, Fine Arts Commission, D.C. Historic Preservation Board completed—May 1985.

Finding of no significant impact by FRA—August 1985.

Asbestos removal completed—October 1985.

Negotiations with preferred developer on development agreement and sublease concluded—October 1985.

Sent to Secretary of Department of Transportation for signature.

Demolition contractor selected O'Rourke—November 1985.

Demolition Work Began—December 2, 1985.

Architectural, structural, mechanical and electrical drawings and specifications 50 percent—completed—November 15, 1985.

Estimate of construction costs underway by construction manager.

Total cost to date—$5,800,000 out of $70,000,000 available. Corporate expenses: $800,000; professional services: $3,600,000; building repairs/asbestos removal: $1,400,000.

Estimated completion date—Early 1988.

SUMMARY OF SUBLEASE AND NEGOTIATIONS WITH UNION STATION VENTURE

USV, a joint venture of LaSalle Partners, Inc., Equity Associates, Inc., Williams Jackson Ewing and Ben Thompson Associates was designated as the "preferred developer" on August 28, 1984, following a developer competition. On March 14, 1985, general agreement was reached on business terms and on the outline of the proposed sublease. The terms of agreement were reported to the USRC Board June 3, 1985, and the President of USRC was authorized to conclude negotiations with USV for the sublease and development agreement to be signed by the Secretary of Transportation. During the summer and early fall of 1985, USRC and USV negotiated a sublease which has been signed by USRC and USV and a development agreement which has been signed by Secretary Dole and USV.

The major points covered in the two documents are:

1. Union Station Venture is designated as the developer of the commercial portions of the station.

2. USV will lease the Union Station, the historic concourse, the new train concourse and adjacent land. They do not lease the parking structure or the air rights over the tracks.

3. The term of the lease is 29 years fixed with five 14-year options. Rent adjustment is provided at each portion option period.

4. The Base Rent is $1,000,000 per annum net with a CPI inflator beginning in the third year of 40% of the increase in the CPI on an annual basis. In addition, USRC will receive Participation Rent equal to 50% of all "Project Cash Flow" as defined in the agreement.

5. USRC is to restore and renovate the historic structure and to make certain improvements for USV which will allow them to complete their physical improvements. USRC construction costs are estimated to be about $57,000,000 not including contingencies. USV expects to spend about $31,000,000 in total development costs.

6. USV will develop approximately 200,000 square feet of specialty retail space on three levels and will lease 80-85,000 square feet of office space to Amtrak.

7. Amtrak will have new facilities in the central portion of the historic concourse and waiting areas in the train concourse.

8. USV proposes to finance $28,000,000 of debt and raise $3,000,000 in Equity. USRC has the right to review and approve financing and may provide alternate sources of finance if not satisfied with the USV financing. Because we share equally in cash flow, it is in our mutual interest to secure the best possible financing.

9. USV agrees to meet USRC goals for minority participation including women in all phases of the development.

10. USRC retains rights of design approval on store fronts and will monitor that the project will be operated in a first class manner.

11. These are other usual and normal terms and conditions for a project of this complexity.

5 YEARS AFTER CLOSE, UNION STATION WORK STARTS

(By Stephen J. Lynton)

The vacant halls of Washington's cavernous Union Station echo with the clang, scrape and rumble of crowbars, shovels and bulldozer-like loading machines that scoop debris into dump trucks. The air is thick with plaster dust and permeated by the acrid smell of cutting torches.

For the first time since the once-splendid railroad terminal was closed as a hazard five years ago, major reconstruction work is under way. Behind padlocked doors and barricades, demolition crews are ripping out obsolete fixtures, pipes and wiring. Soon, officials say, restoration will begin.

Under federal plans, the massive, decaying granite edifice, built in 1907 within sight of the Capitol, is to be renovated at a cost of nearly $140 million in federal and private funds.

The building, scheduled to reopen in 1987 or early 1988, will house a refurbished train station along with restaurants, movie theaters and shops.

Last week, federal officials announced an agreement designed to end government spending on the station after it reopens. Under the accord, private developers will pay the government at least $1 million a year in rent—enough, officials said, to pay all outstanding debts and other costs.

During a stroll through the dim, chilly hallways one recent afternoon, Keith Kelly, who heads a nonprofit group overseeing the restoration, turned to William E. DuVall, a key construction official. "You can't believe the difference, Bill, with all of the junk out of here," Kelly said.

As the two men eyed the rubble-strewn passageways, they predicted a grant metamorphosis. "That is the mezzanine area where there will be a restaurant," said DuVall, pointing to a sooty chamber filled with dangling wires, ripped insulation and debris. Said Kelly, "It'll have tables looking right over here."

The gourmet restaurant planned at Union Station's southwest end would overlook the Capitol and fountains in Columbus Plaza. Today this prospective dining salon is marked by a warning sign: "Warning trash chute overhead." Through the chute, discarded hunks of metal and plaster are dumped.

The demolition work inside the building began early last month and is expected to be completed by March or April.

The $1.8 million job is being carried out by O'Rourke Construction Co., a major Cincinnati-based wrecking outfit.

Officials plan to hire a general contractor to start the renovation work by June.

Union Station was ordered shut in 1981 because of leaks in its roof and other deterioration. Officials termed the building unsafe.

Since then, railroad passengers have had to walk around the three-block-long structure to a separate terminal erected behind it.

At the time, the government already had invested $117 million in the project, stirring widespread controversy and criticism.

The monumental station had been converted into a National Visitor Center with a large slide-show pit in its main waiting room.

Two years ago, Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Hanford Dole announced plans to restore the structure as a "vibrant" showpiece.

Planners say they hope to recreate the bustling atmosphere and elegance the terminal had in its heyday. Workers also are completing a long-unfinished parking garage behind it.

The building's stately, colonnaded exterior is to be preserved. In the interior, officials said, care has been taken to prevent damage to any historic ornaments, columns, marble floors and other structures during the demolition and reconstruction work.

"One of the things we've done is disassemble the old clock," said DuVall, who heads a construction team formed by Gilbane Building Co. and Sherman R. Smoot Co. to manage the project.

The elaborate clock has been removed from a wall and locked in the terminal's ornate Presidential Suite to ensure its safety.

Kelly, executive director-president of the Union Station Redevelopment Corp., the federally backed agency overseeing the renovation, gased at the building's gilded arches, where new lighting and air ducts were being tested.

None of these fixtures seemed suitable, he said, and others must be devised.

Workers, wearing masks as a safeguard against the dust-filled air, largely have finished clearing debris from the building's upper stories, where a series of offices is planned beneath broad skylights.

Crews are removing unwanted dry wall coverings on the main floor to reveal old granite columns.

In the central hall, the controversial pit was heaped with a jumble of twisted metal.

Soon, officials said, the pit will be hidden beneath concrete and covered with a white and red marble floor designed to match the station's historic decor.

UNION STATION CHRONOLOGY

October 1907—Union Station opens.

May 16, 1967—A commission headed by Rep. Kenneth L. Gray (D. Ill.) announces plan to transform Union Station into a National Visitor Center at a cost of up to $20 million.

March 12, 1968—President Johnson signs legislation to create the National Visitor Center, saying it "will assure that in the future, visitors to Washington will be given a proper welcome."

June 4, 1976—Constructiopn of a parking garage for the National Visitor Center is ordered suspended by the Interior Department because of a $4.9 million cost overrun.

July 4, 1976—The National Visitor Center, estimated to have cost $42 million, opens after a three-month delay, drawing praise from many of the 20,000 bicentennial visitors.

Sept. 28, 1976—Federal officials announce a proposal to convert part of the National Visitor Center back to a railroad station.

Feb. 23, 1981—Federal officials close the National Visitor Center, declaring the building unsafe because of leaks and other deterioration.

March 2, 1983—Secretary of Transportation Elizabeth Hanford Dole announces a plan to renovate and reopen the building as a "vibrant" railroad terminal with restaurants and shops.

March 22, 1984—D.C. and federal officials announce the awarding of a $24.8 million contract to complete the parking garage.

Dec. 2, 1985—Demolition begins inside the building to prepare for renovation, expected to be completed in late 1987 or early 1988.●

GRAMM-RUDMAN-HOLLINGS

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, in my 11 years—now starting my 12th—in the U.S. Congress, I do not remember any single piece of legislation that has been as badly misunderstood as the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings proposal. Nationally circulated periodicals that usually are accurate contain misinformation.

Groups have been told every kind of wild story about what will happen to their programs as a result of the passage of Gramm-Rudman-Hollings.

One of my favorite columnists is Tom Wicker of the New York Times. I rarely disagree with him. His contributions have been significant, not only in national economic affairs but in the area of penal reform, a responsible U.S. role in international affairs, and in many other areas too numerous to mention.

He has had several columns on Gramm-Rudman-Hollings on which I differ.

I am submitting for the RECORD one of his columns and my letter to him about that column.

Let me add that for those who say "we have to balance the budget, but let us not use the Gramm-Rudman mechanism," there is nothing to prevent using other mechanisms. The Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is there only if all other mechanisms fail. Those of us who voted for Gramm-Rudman generally do not favor the across-the-board cut that it could cause, but we recognize that we cannot indefinitely continue our present course without jeopardizing everything we believe in.

I ask that the Tom Wicker column plus my response to him be printed in the RECORD.

The material follows:

WORSE THAN DEFICITS

(By Tom Wecker)

"Something has to be done about the deficit," say those who support the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget-balancing bill already passed by the Senate. But some things are worse than the deficit, and Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is one of them.

This ill-disguised flight from Congressional responsibility would force $36 billion reductions in the deficit in each of five fiscal years ending in 1991, ostensibly achieving a balanced budget by then. If the President and Congress fail to make such deficit cuts in the conventional manner, the President would be required to impose the necessary reductions, exempting only Social Security benefits, contracts already agreed to, and debt service.

Aside from the expansion of Presidential power that might result, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is a "cure" worse than the malady for at least the following reasons:

It could increase the 1986 deficit. To avoid painful votes by members of Congress running for re-election next year, Gramm-Rudman-Hollings sets a 1986 deficit target of $180 billion, $5 billion more than the Congressional Budget Office is currently estimating. It also adds an escape clause allowing the 1986 deficit to exceed even the $180 billion figure by 7 percent (up to about $192 billion) before any mandated reduction would be required. Clever, these politicians.

It ignores the need for added revenues. This legislation would not force Ronald Reagan, if he had to make mandatory deficit reductions, to request new taxes—and those who think he would do so voluntarily need only look at his resistance (he's threatening a veto) even to keeping the cigarette excise tax at 16 cents rather than reducing it to 8 cents, as scheduled years ago.

Nor would Gramm-Rudman-Hollings close tax loopholes, another major deficit villian. Philip M. Stern has pointed out in The Washington Post that such tax breaks, many benefiting special interests only, cost the Government over $400 billion a year. The Joint Economic Committee estimates that the loss will increase by $40 billion each year—$4 billion more than the mandated annual deficit reductions—until 1991.

It muddles the military spending issue. If the deficits were too large, President Reagan would have to cut military as well as non-military spending. Intent on his military build-up, he clearly doesn't want to be forced to make such cuts; and Caspar Weinberger, the implacable Secretary of Defense, already has said that the President "would have to retain the authority to request the amounts" that he considers vital to national security.

Here are the seeds of a dangerous and unnecessary constitutional conflict—one that Congress might not win. If Mr. Reagan evaded congressionally mandated military cuts on grounds of national security, would the courts force him to comply? In the past, they've shown themselves reluctant to interfere with a President's exercise of his powers as Commander in Chief. Better that Congress, if it sees the need, should cut military spending straightforwardly.

It's bad economics. Very bad. In 1986, economic growth is estimated at 3 percent or more. Such a growth here would be a good time to reduce the deficit; but as explained before, no reduction will be required in 1986. In the future, however, there could be a succession of stagnant or recession years. To force $36 billion spending cuts in such years would be precisely the wrong economic medicine.

Worse, the basis for doing so would be extremely shaky. The size of the deficit for a given year can't be pinpointed months in advance; it depends on too many such variables as the rate of economic growth. Estimated deficits would be the basis upon which it would, or would not, become necessary for the President to order the mandated deficit reductions. An actual deficit could prove so much smaller than the projection that harsh mandated budget cuts would turn out to have been unnecessary; but the cuts and their economic effects would already be in place.

Besides, to place such a heavy burden on estimated deficits, as Rudolph Penner of the Congressional Budget Office has pointed out, would yield too much power to the unelected bureaucrats who make the estimates—one more way in which Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is the opposite of Congressional responsibility.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, November 24, 1985.

Mr. TOM WICKER,
New York Times, 229 West 43rd Street, New York, NY.

DEAR TOM: I read your column on the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill, and this is one of those rare occasions when I disagree with you.

I'm enclosing a column I wrote on the subject which may interest you.

On the points that you raise, let me comment briefly.

1. "It could raise the 1986 deficit." The reality is that it accepts the 1986 deficit. I would prefer the House approach to moving on that deficit now, but I don't think the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings bill changes the present reality.

2. "It ignores the need for added revenues." Here you will find that almost all of us who are Democrats who voted for it did so in part because we think it will force the Administration to face up to the revenue reality. I was one of those "foolish" people who, during my campaign, said we had to have additional revenue. I was attacked in TV commercials by my opponent for having said that. Clearly, we have to increase revenue and do it significantly. This bill is the only way I know to force the Administration to do that.

3. "It muddles the military spending issue." I'm not sure it muddles it because the steepest cuts would come in defense spending. For that reason, Secretary Weinberger opposes the proposal and wants the President to veto it. Tom Wicker and Cap Weinberger are on the same side on this one! As a matter of fact, if for some reason the courts should rule that the military spending cuts are not constitutional, the bill is set up so that the entire bill then is null and void.

4. "It's bad economics." That's a matter of judgment, and I can't prove you're wrong, though there are a great many economists who believe that the drop in interest rates resulting from Gramm-Rudman-Hollings would be healthy. What is clear is that we cannot continue the kind of growth and interest expenditures without doing two things: first, we ultimately threaten the economy of the country; second, we create a decreasingly progressive society because more and more of the national income will have to go for interest. The interest expenditure this year (approximately $181 billion) is the most massive redistribution of wealth in modern history. It takes from the poor and middle income people and gives to those who are wealthy.

Interest is now the third largest expenditure in the federal budget, after defense and Social Security. By fiscal year 1991, if we do not change our habits, interest will be #1. It will then double every four years.

Between fiscal year 1980 and the current fiscal year, we have had the following increases in outlays: Defense, 88%; entitlements, 56%; discretionary non-defense, 20%; interest, 240%. Obviously, we can't keep that up very long.

For those of us who favor doing more on problems of education and health care and other needs in our society, it is increasingly clear that we cannot continue to let the cancer of deficits and interest payments grow.

Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is not a perfect bill, but it will force the Administration to face up to revenue needs, and it will force Congress to face up to the deficit.

Cordially,

PAUL SIMON,
U.S. Senator. ●

THE 38TH BIRTHDAY OF ANATOLY SHCHARANSKY

● Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, on January 20, we honored the memory of a great fighter for justice and human rights, the Reverend Martin Luther King, Jr. It so happened that that same day marked the 38th birthday of another brave champion of human rights, Anatoly Shcharansky, the Soviet dissident. Mr. Shcharansky is serving a 13-year prison term because of his outspoken defense of fundamental human freedoms.

Shcharansky had become the unofficial spokesman of the Jewish emigration movement in the U.S.S.R. when he was arrested on March 15, 1977, and charged with treason. Held incommunicado for 16 months, he was tried for alleged anti-Soviet agitation and spying for the CIA in April 1978. In July of that year, he received a sentence of 3 years in prison and 10 years of forced labor.

After surviving the first part of his punishment—a 3-year stint in the notorious Chistopol Prison—he was transferred to the Perm Labor Camp where he continued to suffer official abuse. At Perm in 1981 Shcharansky was subjected to 185 days in a punishment cell (where prisoners are fed once every 2 days) for a series of "infractions," including attempts to practice his religion. This maltreatment culminated in October 1981 when a three-man kangaroo court decreed that in retaliation for refusing to "admit his guilt," Shcharansky be sent back to Chistopol Prison for another 3 years.

To protest the cutting off of all communication with his family, Shcharansky went on a prolonged hunger strike in 1982. As a result of this hunger strike and the generally deplorable conditions of his confinement, he has suffered serious health problems.

Shcharansky is back in Perm Labor Camp now, and his health continues to deteriorate. Information received by his wife early this year indicates that he has been given an additional 5-month sentence to be served in an isolation cell within the labor camp. The fact that he is still being punished for "infractions" seems to indicate that his spirit has not been broken. The circumstances Shcharansky has faced over the past 9 years would have destroyed many other people. He is indeed an individual of rare courage and strength of conviction.

Anatoly Shcharansky's only desire is to be allowed to join his wife Avital in Israel. Since his imprisonment, countless pleas for Shcharansky's release on humanitarian grounds have been ignored by the Soviets. President Reagan's meeting with Secretary-General Gorbachev last November raised hopes that perhpas the Soviets would consider releasing Shcharansky, among others, as a "goodwill" gesture. That these hopes did not materialize indicates that the Soviets have a long way to go to achieve even minimal compliance with the Helsinki accords and other human rights treaties they have signed.

The Soviets may continue to put Shcharansky in isolation; they may continue to refuse him visitors or to confiscate his mail. But they will not succeed in cutting the ties that bind him to all those who cherish freedom. For those of us who have shared his ordeal, Shcharansky will not disappear into the obscurity of a Soviet labor camp. He will remain in our hearts and in our minds. And we will continue to pressure the Soviets to release Shcharansky and the other Prisoners of Conscience.●

FOR A BETTER UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN AMERICAN JEWS AND GERMANS

● Mr. SIMON. Mr. President, recently when I was in the Chicago area, someone handed me a copy of der Monat, a German-American monthly publication published in that city.

I was favorably impressed by it, but I was particularly interested in an article by Dr. Juergen Goldschmidt under the title, "For a Better Understanding Between American Jews and Germans."

The author, Dr. Goldschmidt, is not identified, and I don't know what his background may be.

But the article is a sensitive article calling for greater understanding between two people.

The cause of the misunderstanding is massive and cannot be underestimated.

But the more understanding we can have between, people, whatever their background and whatever the past wrongs and misunderstandings, the better the world we can build tomorrow for our children.

I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

FOR A BETTER UNDERSTANDING BETWEEN AMERICAN JEWS AND GERMANS

(By Dr. Juergen Goldschmidt)

On May 8th of this year, 40 years after the German capitulation, the President of the Federal Republic of Germany, Richard Freiherrvon Weizsäcker, held a discourse that was later to be pronounced by the Israeli ambassador to have been a "moment of glory" in West German-Israelities. The Bundespresseamt (Federal Press Agency) printed 250,000 copies of this speech and distributed them to schools and individuals. It has since then appeared on discs and tapes in copies of more than 10,000 each. More reprints were necessary, as the original issues were reapidly sold out. Thousands and thousands of letters of approval from all levels of German society still inundate the President's office in Bonn and although his staff works late into the night, only a fraction of them can be answered, the rest is to be compiled in history archives.

What happened to launch this universal acclaim?

A few days after the visit to Bitburg of the U.S. President and the Chancellor of the Federal Republic of Germany were they laid down a wreath at the tombs of German soldiers and members of the Waffen-SS—an act that gave rise to a heated discussion in the American media—President Richard von Weizsäcker, with the authority of this position and with a frankness and outspokenness hitherto unexperienced at this high level before the German Parliament challenged some postures adopted by members of a certain generation, postures that sometimes served to half unveil and half camouflage Germany's recent history or, as the New York Times put it: "Momentarily Weizsäcker had cleared the air of a seamy self-pitying revisionism, banishing a half articulated wish among some older Germans that Reagan's gesture at Bitburg might be some final act of absolution, a ritual cleansing of Germany's past". It has to be added, however, that the visit at Bitburg was never intended to symbolize a "ritual cleansing" but rather "to commemorate the injustice and human suffering, to recall liberty regained and to make the reconciliation of nations" as President von Weizsäcker put it in the evening of May 5 on the occasion of a dinner given for the American President.

What exactly are those contentions still widely held in a certain generation of my compatriots that again and again are barring reconcilatory efforts between a new democratic Germany and especially American Jews? In parenthesis we should add that it sometimes appears as if comprehension of each other's position for various reasons has advanced more between Germans and Israelis than between Germans and American Jews. In Israel it is known and widely acknowledged that for the first time in the history of Jews, a genuine effort had been undertaken to idemnify the survivors of a pogrom for material damages. Prominent Jews readily admitted that the payment of ca. $30 billion from the post-war years until now to both the State of Israel and individuals ranks among the outstanding accomplishments morally as well as materially of the young Federal Republic of Germany.

If we examine more closely the doubtful postures mentioned above, we find that perhaps the most widespread contention that often serves as an excuse for not acknowledging liability for the holocaust constitutes the fact that the murderous acts were executed in utmost secrecy, thus allowing one to state "that one did not know what was actually happening". To this President von Weizsäcker said: "It (the holocaust) was concealed from the eyes of the public, but every German was able to experience what his Jewish compatriots had to suffer, ranging from plain apathy and hidden intolerance to outright hatred. Who could remain unsuspecting after the burning of synagogues, the plundering, the stigmatization with the Star of David, the depriviation of rights, the ceaseless violation of human dignity? Whoever opened his eyes and ears and sought information could not fail to notice that Jews were being deported. The nature and scope of the destruction may have exceeded human imagination, but in reality there was, apart from the crime itself, the attempt by too many people, including those of my generation, who were young and were not involved in planning the events and carrying them out, not to take note of what was happening. There were many ways of not burdening one's conscience, of shunning responsibility, looking away, keeping mum. When the unspeakable truth of the holocaust then became known at the end of the war, all too many of us claimed that they had not known anything about it nor even suspected anything."

Another argument readily evoked especially by younger and middle-aged Germans is the contention that they are simply too young to have "anything to do" with the holocaust. This argument confounds guilt (culpa) with responsibility and liability, an error, at which the first President of the Federal Republic of Germany, Professor Theodor Heuss, already had hinted. Although this confusion of mind is alien to judicial argumentation, one must, however, not forget that we are not in a law classroom but in the sphere of political argumentation about a highly sensitive matter. Once again von Weizacker cleared the air when he said "There is no such thing as the guilt or innocence of an entire nation. Guilt is, like innocence, not collective, but personal. There is discovered or concealed individual guilt. There is guilt which people acknowledge or deny. Everyone who directly experienced that era should today quietly ask himself about his involvement then.

"The vast majority of today's population were either children then or had not been born. They cannot profess a guilt of their own for crimes that they did not commit. No discerning person can expect them to wear a penitential robe simply because they are Germans. But their forefathers have left them a grave legacy. All of us, whether guilty or nor, whether old or young, must accept the past. We are all affected by its consequences and liable for it. The young and old generation must and can help each other to understand why it is vital to keep alive memories. It is not a case of coming to terms with the past. That is not possible. It cannot be subsequently modified or made not to have happened. However, anyone who closes his eyes to the past is blind to the present. Whoever refuses to remember the inhumanity is prone to new risks of infection."

II

The Bitburg experience was painful for any German living in America. The idea to visit a war cemetery was born out of the best intentions, and my country has proven for more than 30 years that it had found its way back into the family of nations, sharing the basic democratic and humanitarian values with our Western Allies and leading an active peace policy with our Eastern neighbors. Therefore the outcry about Bitburg was unexpected but it can help to redefine positions and like a lightning bolt it showed us, Germans and American Jews alike, for a fraction of a moment where we really stand. The event might have shattered illusions, but this is good because it helps us to tackle the problem of reconciliation between Germans and American Jews from a more realistic point of view. Remembrance is a burden as far as the holocaust, the persecution of Jews is concerned, but remembrance can be an opportunity when it is directed to a facet of Jewish-German relationship that proved highly fertile intellectually throughout long periods of history. Remembrance plays an important role in Jewish life. Let me quote President von Weizsäcker again:

"The Jewish nation remembers and will always remember. We seek reconciliation. Precisely for this reason we must understand that there can be no reconciliation without remembrance. The experience of millionfold death is part of the very being of every Jew in the world, not only because people cannot forget such atrocities, but also because remembrance is part of the Jewish faith.

"Seeking to forget makes exile all the longer. The secret of redemption lies in remembrance.' This oft-quoted Jewish adage surely expresses the idea that faith in God is faith in the work of God in history. Remembrance is experience of the work of God in history. It is the source of faith in redemption. This experience creates hope, creates faith in redemption, in reunification of the divided, in reconciliation. Whoever forgets this experience loses his faith.

"If we for our part sought to forget what has occurred, instead of remembering it, this would not only be inhuman. We would also impinge upon the faith of the Jews who survived and destroy the basis of reconciliation. We must erect a memorial to thoughts and feelings in our own hearts."

But the Jewish people are also the object of remembrance. It is an ethno-psychological phenomenon that the Jews as a people were held liable for centuries for the death of Jesus Christ. St. Augustin (354-430) in De Citate Dei expressed the opinion that God had kept the Jews alive in the Diaspora to demonstrate the triumph of Christendom over Jewry. Pogroms and antisemitism have their origins in this belief, logically incomprehensible but nonetheless real, from the persecution of Jews in the Rhineland during the crusades to the Oberammergau Passion Play, still the discussion goes on whether allusion shall be made to the Jews as the murderers of Jesus Christ. If collective responsibility is held against the Jews for two thousand years, how can we Germans expect to escape the same fate in one or two generations?

For generations if not for centuries the Germans have to live with the remembrance of the holocaust, and one can raise the question whether history thus once again has not made us akin to Jewry as so often before. My colleague von Utamann after a term in Tel Aviv has given a vivid description of this relationship in his book: "Doppelgänger, du bleicher Geselle" (Double, pale mate that you are).

Remembrance can also be understood as a chance. As Julius Guttmann in an article that appeared 1939 in the Judische Wochenumschau in Jerusalem explained, the German Jewry during the 19th Century held the intellectual leadership of Jewish life in Middle and Eastern Europe and hence in America. One reason was the overwhelming number of Jews in Germany and Austria-hungaria compared to England, France, and Italy. Another was the fact that the end of the 18th and beginning of the 19th century was a period of great intellectual movement in Germany, the time of Lessing (Nathan der Weise) Kant, Hegel, Fichte, Herder, and their Jewish counterpart Moses Mendelssohn, as well as Goethe and Schiller—to name but a few. Their ideas challenged the Jewry who then after the emancipation (1812 in Prussia)—more and more chose the path of assimilation and thus had to redefine the role of their Jewishdom. The fundamental debates both about the religious mainstreams (liberalism versus modern orthodoxy, historianism in between) and about the question of Zionism versus assimilation were for the first time, most deeply and most radically debated within the ranks of German Jewry. As these different intellectual positions are still nowadays relevant among American Jews, it only seems natural to me that we remember its roots and the intellectual background that first gave rise to these discussions.

III

Despite and because of this burden we shall undertake every conceivable effort to look for ways and means to get to know each other closer. Out of this closer knowledge gradually an improved understanding might emerge. The simple fact that more than one whole generation of Germans grew up without any intellectual contact to Jewishdom and especially its Ashkenazian version is often overlooked. As a direct consequence of the Holocaust, the overwhelming majority of Germans never met Jews, has no knowledge of the Jewish Holidays, the Jewish Family festivities and the Jewish way of life in general. Whereas more than half a million Jews lived in Germany before World War II, there are nowadays only 25,000, too few to hold up the torch of intellectual brilliance that once characterized the Jewish contribution to Germany's intellectual life as demonstrated by the great number of Jewish Nobel Prize winners of German nationality before 1933 whereas the proportion of Jews in the German population was well under 1 percent. After the Bitburg visit, the Ambassador of the Federal Republic of Germany, Guenther van Well, held a speech at the Annual Meeting of the Board of Governors of B'nai B'rith International and pointed out, that we were determined "to further what B'nai B'rith has always stood for: sound intercultural and interfaith relations." The Ambassador indicated further that B'nai B'rith itself began in Berlin in 1881 and "saw its peak in 1924, when district 8 (Germany) with over 15,000 members was the most populous district of the Order, surpassing even the largest American district . . ." To increase the knowledge of each other, a first exchange of 30 American Jews and German youth took place this year.

More institutional steps were also recently taken to foster the understanding between American Jewry and Germans. "German American Committee on Learning and Remembrance" was established under the presidency of Elie Wiesel, known for his Holocaust Memorial Council, German members are interalia Peter Petersen (Member of Parliament, CDU) Klaus Schütz (Mayor of Berlin 1967-1977 and Ambassador to Israel). The American members are Rabbi Asher, Tempel Emanuel, San Francisco, Professor Raul Hilberg (Contemporary Historian, Univeristy of Vermont), Franklin Littell (Temple University, Philadelphia), Sigmund Strochlitz (former president of the Friends of the University of Haifa), and Bayard Rustin (of the A. Philip Randolph Institute, New York and a former close collaborator of Martin Luther King Jr.) A final working program has not yet been defined but activities will concentrate on lectures and exhibiitions. Also very recently the American Jewish Congress announced the establishment of the "Weisse Rose" Foundation. Weisse Rose (white rose) was a codeword of a group of young students resisting Nazi terror at the Munich University. Hans and Sophie Scholl gave their lives at the age of 24 and 21 for their noble goal. The foundation aims at preserving the remembrance of this "other Germany" by working for a better understanding between American Jews and Germans.

Knowledge of each others uniqueness as individuals, as a group and as a people creates trust and hopefully understanding and perhaps finally reconciliation. We have chosen this itinerary and it is with great pleasure that we feel that American Jews here in Chicago will meet us half-way. On November 7 of this year, the Chicago Chapter of the American Jewish Committee will bestow its Community Service Award on the Robert Bosch Corporation and chief executive officer for service rendered for the sake of American Jewish-German understanding. The award will be accepted by Mr. Stahl, President of the Robert Bosch Corporation on the occasion of the dinner given at the Palmer House which will be attended by some hundred guests. This token of good will is a pleasant surprise for all Germans in Chicago for its gives us the courage not to lessen our efforts in the strife for a better understanding between American Jews and Germans.●

IMPACT OF DELAYING THE TEACHING OF ENGLISH

● Mr. D'AMATO. Mr. President, I rise today to express my concern about the proposal being developed that would delay the teaching of English in public schools in Puerto Rico. In Puerto Rico, both the English and Spanish languages have been taught in grades 1 through 12 since the 1940's. Children have been able to learn both languages during their formative years. This new proposal could adversely affect the future of our children.

The secretary of education of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Ms. Awilda Aponte Roque, has proposed, as part of a comprehensive educational reform, to delay for 3 years the teaching of English in the public school system. This proposal is contrary to the educational system that has been in place in Puerto Rico for decades; it could diminish opportunities for thousands of children. In fact, there is a lack of evidence to show the benefits of this proposal for American children, especially those who resettle in mainland United States.

Puerto Ricans are American citizens. They move freely, like all other American citizens, from the island to the U.S. mainland. At present, there are approximately 1.9 million Puerto Ricans living in the U.S. mainland. Approximately 800,000 live in the State of New York. Without a thorough understanding of English, many of them would find it difficult to move freely from the island to mainland United States. Children resettling from Puerto Rico in New York and in other areas of the country would become less proficient in English.

Recently, I met with Mayor Baltasar Corrada del Rio, the mayor of San Juan, to discuss the impact of this reform. I agree with Mayor Corrada and a host of citizens who feel that more English, not less, is needed. Following are some letters expressing this viewpoint, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD

The letters follow:

[From the San Juan Star, Jan. 24, 1986]

TEACHING IN ENGLISH

This letter is for Education Secretary Awilda Aponte Roque.

Regarding educational reform, there is a question to which I would definitely like an answer. Would you please inform the people of Puerto Rico what schools senator's and representatives children go to. I am sure they're not public schools.

I feel that when government officials feel unsure of their future, they might think that probably with poor educated people they can perpetuate their existence. I would definitely like to know what the real intentions are behind this scheme.

I urge every one to be fierce, courageous and willing to fight for what you believe and defend your rights to what degree is necessary. Speak up and let's defend the right to give our children the education we want them to have.

Like Ann Landers would probably say, Awilda, wake up and smell the coffee.

NEREIDA R. DE GARCIA,
Carparra Heights.

This letter is for Governor Hernandez Colon.

I am a grandmother who studied in Puerto Rico's public schools.

I was taught English from the first grade on. I owe my ability to English to this early teaching and to advanced teaching required in the curriculum. I progressed in English by reading which was taught to me in school. At no time did I experience the confusion of languages on which you base your attempt to eliminate English from the first three grades and make it an optional (not required) subject from the fourth grade on.

I am sure that your sons, those of José Ronaldo (in English: "Rony") Jarabo, Miguel, Awilda, etc., studied or are studying now in private schools, where the teaching quality is better and where English is emphasized.

That way the sons of low income families are deterred from learning English because their parents cannot pay a private school, much less send them to study in the United States.

What you must do is employ competent teachers in both languages. This will ensure better quality in Spanish and English.

Let me inform you that I, and (I am very certain) a large number of Puerto Rican parents are opposed to the elimination of English in the first three grades.

CARMEN M. BUSÓ,
Hato Rey.

READERS' VIEWPOINT

I can't understand how people related to education want to avoid the teaching of English in elementary school in the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd grades. I think, with this attitude, instead of solving a problem a bigger one will be created.

Our children love American customs. They like to dress in American styles; they also like American music, dances, movies, etc. But they don't like to speak English. Most of the time they say they don't like English, but it is because they don't understand it.

In elementary school, English is not emphasized as as it should be. When the students reach junior high school their problem with English really begins.

In secondary schools (grades 7-12) they are taking English as an independent subject, that is with a teacher who teaches only English as in 4th through 6th grades in most of the elementary schools. But differently from the first three grades in elementary school where most of the time they have English with the same teacher who teaches the other subjects. This teacher is not prepared with a concentration in English; enough time is not dedicated to the teaching of English. Consequently the learning of English is not the best and the students won't get enough knowledge of what they need to learn: English.

We all know that the younger a child is, the better he will learn a language. The more you practice a language, the better will be the results.

The solution is not to stop the teaching of English in elementary school. What is needed is to improve the environment to teach English since the early grades. Everyday we can see the importance of knowing English: to understand it and communicate it with others.

It is necessary to emphasize the skills according to the grade, in teaching English in elementary school, so that children will be ready to continue studying and learning more English in secondary school.

In private elementary school children take classes in English. How is English going to be avoided in our public elementary schools?

Most of us had the privilege of studying in public schools where classes were carried on in English and it wasn't as necessary as it is today.

Why is it that many parents send their children to study in the states where everything is taught in English?

Let's help this young generation and don't give them another problem. A complete education is the only ownership that nobody can take away from someone.

TERESA ALLENDE DE PASTOR, Bayamon.

Mr. President, children are our most precious resource, they are the innocent future of this great country. They deserve the best education possible, nothing less. Those who suggest that American children do not need to understand English are denying our children great opportunities.

The Congress, while focusing attention on the issue of child development, has stressed the importance of academic excellence and proficiency, in many instances, we have been joined by the collaborative effort between families and the private sector. Now is not the time to stop seeking excellence. It is crucial that more parents, communities, employers, and agencies serving our youth begin to address the problems facing our children. Congress has taken an active part by including funding for various educational programs for our children.

For example, in Puerto Rico there are approximately 680,000 children enrolled in the public school system. Puerto Rico receives millions of dollars in Federal funds each year. In 1984 they received $108,737,312 for chapter 1 and $8,259,237 for chapter 2; in 1985 they received $112,192,229 for chapter 1 and $9,163,539 for chapter 2. These funds are to expand the horizons of our children, not to restrict them.

We must continue to increase awareness of the needs of our school-aged children; we must maximize our efforts on behalf of the young and vulnerable; we must give our children the best possible education.

Mr. President, I firmly believe that our children must be taught English as well as the other skills necessary for them to be the best that they can be. For many years, American children, and this includes those raised in Puerto Rico, have been taught English at an early age. English is spoken on the island and in mainland United States. It has been the key to success for many. Thus, an attempt to reduce our citizenry's proficiency in English is not only absurd, but also an attack on the American dream.●

FIFTEEN YEARS OF SOVIET PSYCHIATRIC ABUSE

● Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, on January 29, 1971, Soviet dissident, Vladimir Bukovsky, compiled 150 pages of documentation on Soviet abuse of psychiatry and sent the material to Western psychiatrists. Bukovsky put this question: "Do the above-mentioned reports contain enough scientifically based evidence to indicate the necessity of completely isolating these people from society through internment?" Bukovsky eventually received thoughtful responses from the World Federation for Mental Health, and medical groups in Britain, the United States, France, Switzerland, and Holland. Although the World Psychiatric Association [WPA] initially was silent, pressure against Soviet psychiatric abuse finally forced the Soviet Union to withdraw from the WPA in 1983.

Why does the Soviet Government persist in the practice of abusing psychiatry for political purposes? It is a brutally effective way to silence and demoralize political opponents. It is a coldly practical way to hide the scope of repression from the outside world since often even the accused is not present at trials. It is the ultimate expression of a conformist society in which anyone who does not agree or acquiesce in official policies must be mad and treated as such. It is also the ultimate expression of a totalitarian system in which the individual is subjected to the will of the state.

Who are the typical victims of Soviet psychiatric abuse? It is difficult to give a definitive answer to that question due to the secrecy of the Soviet penal system. Two noted Western specialists, Peter Reddaway and Sidney Bloch, provide some answers in their book, "Soviet Psychiatric Abuse." Based on a sample of over 500 cases from 1962 until 1983, they conclude there are 5 basic categories of victims: Human rights activitists, 50 percent; nationalists, 10 percent; would-be emigrants, 20 percent; religious believers, 15 percent; and citizens who are inconvenient to the authorities, 5 percent.

Fifteen years ago, Bukovsky presented the West with accurate reports of Soviet psychiatric abuse. Today, due to world protest, Soviet authorities seem to be somewhat more careful in committing Soviet dissidents to psychiatric hospitals. As the following cases of six long-term victims of Soviet psychiatric abuse show, however, this deplorable practice is still very much alive in the U.S.S.R. today.

Viktor Rafalsky, Ukrainian historian, born in 1919, has spent 15 years in Soviet psychiatric hospitals. Imprisoned from 1954 until 1959 for "Marxist deviation," Rafalsky was subjected to repeated psychiatric examinations. In 1962, Rafalsky was committed to a psychiatric clinic for 2 years for writing "anti-Soviet" literature. Charged with owning a "nationalist, anti-Soviet" novel, Rafalsky was arrested in 1968 and sent to the notorious Dneepropetrovsk Special Psychiatric Hospital [SPH]. Although Rafalsky escaped from a Moscow psychiatric hospital in August 1983, he was soon captured and sent to the Lvov Psychiatric Hospital. In a 1983 smuggled appeal, Rafalsky writes he cannot hold out much longer.

Dr. Algirdas Statkevicius, born in 1923, is a Lithuanian physician now in the Chernyakhovsk SPH. In 1951, he was given a 25-year term for his Lithuanian resistance work; he served 9 years. In 1970, Statkevicius was arrested for his writings; he spent over 2 years in a psychiatric hospital. Statkevicius later joined the Lithuanian Helsinki Group. He also signed the 1979 Baltic memorandum denouncing the Molotov-Ribbentrop Pact which "legalized" Soviet annexation of the Baltic States. Statkevicius was arrested on February 14, 1980. Ruled nonaccountable for his actions in August 1980, Statkevicius was sent to the Chernyakhovsk SPH. A few days later, Statkevicius protested his closed trial, asking permission to emigrate to the United States where his sister lives.

Vladimir Gershuni, born in 1930, a bricklayer, is the grandson of Grigori Gershuni, founder of the Social Revolutionary Party. First arrested in 1949 for belonging to an anti-Stalinist student group, Gershuni spent 10 years in the camps. Arrested for samizdat, Gershuni was arrested on October 18, 1969 for "anti-Soviet slander." Ruled "chronically schizophrenic," he spent 4 years in the Orel SPH. In the mid-1970's, Gershuni was an editor of Poiski and was active in the Free Interprofessional Union of Workers [SMOT]. Charged with "anti-Soviet slander", Gershuni was arrested on June 17, 1982, and ruled "schizophrenic" at the infamous Serbsky Institute. After a closed trial on April 12, 1983, Gershuni was sent to the Alma-Ata SPH where he is to this day.

Egor Volkov, Russian worker, born in 1927, has been in the Blagoveshchensk SPH since 1968. Volkov was first imprisoned for a few months in 1943 in a POW camp. In 1948, Volkov was found guilty of insubordination—for protesting refusal to grant home leave to visit his dying father; he spent 2 years in an army disciplinary battalion. Volkov was sentenced to another 2 year camp term in 1963, allegedly for "hooliganism," actually for listening to foreign radio broadcasts. Volkov was arrested for "anti-Soviet slander" in 1967—he had led a strike to protest meager wages for his construction crew in Nakhodka. Ruled a "paranoid schizophrenic," Volkov has been at Blagoveshchensk ever since.

Anna Chertkova, a Russian Baptist born in 1927, has been in psychiatric hospital since 1973. For several years before her incarceration, Chertkova was denied living accommodation in Alma Ata and was harrased in other ways. Accused of "anti-Soviet slander", she was arrested in 1973, ruled nonaccountable due to so-called "sluggish schizophrenia." The official court finding is that Chertkova "made antistate expressions on the basis of her religious belief." Ever since that time, Chertkova has undergone forcible drug treatments in the Kazan and Tashkent SPH's.

Father Iosif Mikhailov, a Russian Orthodox priest from Ufa, was born in 1934. He has been held in the Kazan SPH since 1971. Mikhailov was arrested in 1971 for sending a letter to the United Nations to protest Soviet state interference in church life. During his years in the Kazan SPH, Mikhailov has been subjected to constant forcible drug treatments. He has been told that these treatments will end only when he renounces his faith; Mikhailov has remained steadfast in his belief. In late 1983. Mikhailov was transferred to an ordinary psychiatric hospital in an unknown location.

These six cases reveal the human dimensions of the Soviet abuse of psychiatry. These six men and women have also been subjected to debilitating drug treatments in vain efforts to make them give up their beliefs. There are hundreds of sane men and women known to be in Soviet psychiatric hsopitals today. Probably the actual number of victims of psychiatric abuse ranges into the thousands. It is difficult to comprehend why the Soviet authorities persist in this brutal perversion of their responsibility toward their citizens. One answer is the Kremlin's chronic fear of truly Soviet independent men and women.●

HIGHER EDUCATION AND THE NATION'S FUTURE

● Mr. KERRY. Mr. President, The reputation of Massachusetts for educational excellence continues as a result of the extraordinary people who continue to provide the ideas that allow our institutions to grow and prosper. Lesley College, which has grown dramatically in the last 75 years that it has been educating young men and women in Cambridge, recently inaugurated Margaret A. McKenna as its third president. In her speech following her inaugaration. Ms. McKenna proved eloquently that her tenure as President will bring to Lesley and our educational community an energy and interest in innovation that will serve to continue Massachusetts' reputation for leading the Nation in the field of education. I wish Ms. McKenna well in her new position and I know that she will make us all proud in the coming years.

I ask that Ms. McKenna's speech be printed in the RECORD.

The speech follows:

SHAPING THE CHANGE: HIGHER EDUCATION AND THE NATION'S FUTURE

(By Margaret A. McKenna)

Members of the Lesley Community, visiting delegates, colleagues, family and friends, I am delighted that you are here to join in this inaugural ceremony. It is a special day and a time of grest excitement and expectation.

Some ceremonies derive their significance from their place in a rite of passage. New Years' celebrations, births, commencements, weddings—are all threshold experiences, recalling the past even as they usher in the future.

The investiture ceremony just conducted symbolizes the passing of an era and the coming of another. The charter and seal just presented to me—not only represent this college's proud past, reminding us of the traditions which have given rise to the present; they also embody living principles—steering orders which will help chart Lesley's future in the years ahead.

These proceedings are at the end of a year-long celebration of the College's first 75 years. Almost fifty years of the college's history are represented by Alumni in the Academic procession today. Founded in 1909 as one of the earliest training grounds for the then experimental institution, the kindergarten, Lesley has continued to be linked to innovation in education.

Lesley's dedication to a practical and humanisitic blend of field-based education and rigorous academic work assured that through the years the "reality test" of the workplace informed all its teaching and learning.

Curricula and programs at Lesley demonstrate a responsiveness that is rare among institutions of higher learning today. It's longstanding commitment to the education of women continues in its undergraduate college for women and in the importance it places on truly co-equal education in its Graduate School and PMBI. As a graduate of a women's college, I know how special it is to be involved with such an institution, especially in this era where opportunities for women are unparalleled. I stand here today as a witness to that fact.

This is truly an exciting legacy to inherit, and I am grateful to the many individuals—trustees, administrators, faculty and students—who over the years have worked to preserve and enhance it. I am also deeply honored by their faith in selecting me to help carry on the Lesley "tradition of excellence and innovation."

The ritual surrounding this installation—the symbols; the testimonials; the title, President—could turn one's head or, at least, increase one's hat size. However, I am blessed with a reality-bound and scrupulously honest five year old. My son Michael, in telling his friend, Reif, about my new job, related with some pride that his mom was now a College President. Reif did not seem impressed and went on playing with his latest transformer. Michael, like his mother, not one to give up, explained that mom was now the boss of a whole school. Now that did impress Reif who started to ask a number of questions. After a few minutes, Michael felt this had gone on long enough, and said, "Listen, it's really not that great. She's the boss of a school, but the school doesn't have any kids."

While we do not have any kids, we have a fine tradition of being responsive to the needs of children and adults.

It was in the spirit of that tradition that yesterday Dean Patricia Graham and President Daniel Perlman discussed the challenges facing higher education, and later Rosabeth Moss Kanter shared her view of "The Challenge of Change," for our nation's corporations.

I enter into this rite of passage hoping to share with you some of my views of the challenges facing our colleges and our nation.

America's resources are enormous. The richness of our people, our industries, our technologies; the strengths and diversity of our institutions of higher learning are enviable. Yet, as great as these are, America faces some tough new realities.

The post-war period of unchallenged American economic dynamism has ended. America no longer stands far ahead and alone as a nation.

Whether we are talking of reversing trade balances, limiting our vulnerability to oil producing countries, combatting terrorists of all stripes, or reducing the number of weapons and the potential for super-power conflict—we do so with the knowledge that there has been some erosion of national power; and Americans feel it deeply.

On the domestic side, we face equal challenges—the growing national deficit, slow growth economy, productivity declines, and falling educational achievement.

I am convinced that we have the resources to face and deal with our problems. We are a strong nation and a strong people, but to remain so, we cannot continue just to reaffirm inappropriate priorities, simply tinker with present policies, and offer more of the same.

There have been dramatic changes in our society. We look different as a people. Today the fastest growing segment of the population are those over 85. By the year 2000, fifteen short years from now, there will be more people over 21 than under, and over 30% of us will be from minority groups.

Our institutions and their roles have changed. Most family policy is based on the definition of a family of working father, mother at home, and two children. Only 7% of families now mirror this definition.

The influx of women in the workforce in the last decade has been dramatic. Over 52% of women are working full time, including over half, or 20 million mothers with children under age six. At the turn of the Century, about 3% of College students were women. The general reaction to their presence ranged from skepticism to hostility. David Starr Jordan, President of Stanford, responded to critics by stating, "If the college woman is a mistake, nature will eliminate her." By 1960, 25% of college graduates were women and today over half of all college students are women.

Demographic data can be a powerful tool; but powerful only if we choose to use its predictive capacity.

The data revealing ebb and flow of birth rates are a case in point. It was clear several years ago that the baby boom, which buoyed enrollments in higher education throughout the sixties and seventies, would in the eighties and nineties become a baby bust. Yet education's response to changing constituencies has been slow and federal planning, including student loan programs, is based on traditional full-time college students.

We are now beginning to see and will continue to be affected by a mini-boomlet in pre-school and early primary grades. Yet, this September, there were shortages of elementary teachers in almost every major city in the United States. Federal programs like Head Start have been level funded or cut, and over 2½ million children who are eligible for such programs are denied access.

The number of families where both parents work is increasing. In less than five years, 18 million more children will live in households where both parents work full-time. Over half the children born this year will live in a single parent family before reaching 18. Availability and quality of day care should be a top priority, yet the nation's response is fragmented and uncoordinated. Standards and licensing are inconsistent, insurance coverage has become a significant problem and over ⅔ of all day care workers are paid poverty level wages.

From 1979 to 1983, the number of children in poverty grew by 3.7 million; almost half of the poor in the U.S. are children. The feminization of poverty and the significant growth of poor in the ranks of senior citizens are facts. Since proverty is centered in the very young and the very old, we must also accept the fact that human service and educational needs increase as the inevitable consequence of poverty.

The sad fact is, as a nation we have all but chosen to ignore the obvious consequences of these changes. The guilty secret of our nation's current economic prosperity is that it is purchased at the cost of both a spiralling national debt and a retreat from the kinds of programs and planning which would enable us to address NEEDS before they become major national CRISES.

I have been a member of the audience at two recent presentations where issues of poverty were discussed. The response of the majority of the audience was glazed eyed indifference: "We're doing OK." The fact of the matter is that the line between a livable income and poverty is SLIGHT. A major illness, a disease, a plant closing—move families across that line. Two out of ten families live in poverty at least one year in ten. Some of these are students and some of these are our own alumni.

Blacks are twice as likely to be poor as whites. Enforcement of our civil rights laws has slackened, racism is still pervasive and the gap between median income of whites and blacks continues to grow.

In fact, the per capita income in the U.S. has dropped to fifth in the world, and productivity, or lack of it, has become a popular topic in corporate board rooms. As a result, new philosophies of management are being analyzed and tried as corporations seek new methods and means.

Such changes in the economic, social, and demographic fiber of our nation suggest additional future challenges for higher education. During the coming years, not only more, but different kinds of teachers, human service professionals, and managers will be necessary.

Of course, more engineers, computer programmers and scientists will be required, but it is a mistake to see the solution to all our challenges in terms of some high tech panacea.

By 1990 we will need two times as many new elementary teachers as computer programmers. Yet, 1984 was the last year the supply of new teacher graduates met the nation's demand. In the fall of 1986 we will need 165,000 new teachers—only 144,000 will be ready to enter the classroom. If present interest in teaching remains constant, in just over 5 years, when the country will be looking for one million new elementary teachers, there will be a shortage of almost 350,000.

The picture is the same in dozens of fields within human services and counseling where growing shortages of qualified professionals are running up against a demand that is increasing geometrically as the demographic shifts we can predict today, continue to unfold.

A similar picture merges in the corporate world where there is a growing recognition that future managers will require entirely new skills and preparation. Here, the demand for innovation is critical, the STATUS QUO fatal.

All of our resources, including women and people of color, must be utilized because it is right and because we need them.

Whether or not outside funding and support is adequate, luke warm, or deplorable—colleges have a responsibility to provide the quantity and quality of programs necessary to respond to these changes. How we respond, what kind of educational vision we define, how innovative and flexible we can become—will determine not only our own success but our nation's as well.

Those who ignore this responsibility misconstrue the essential and reciprocal relationship between higher learning and the nation. As Carnegie Foundation president, Ernest L. Boyer has recently observed,

"To regard American education as somehow unrelated to national concerns is as grievious as it is dangerous in a complex, interrelated world. To fail to provide students with a perspective beyond self-interest is to fail the nation?

In addition to providing appropriate programs, we must find ways to attract bright and committed students to them. The young woman from Dorchester who wants to return to her neighborhood to run the day care center as well as the returning mature student who has learned through his experience as a volunteer hot line worker that his abilities lie in counseling, provide resources to society surely as important as the computer scientists or the lawyer. They must be given educational opportunities that are both flexible and affordable.

Off-site, weekend learning, self paced, and pedagogically innovative programs must be available. Society must do more to underscore the importance of contributions in the fields of education and human services through greater recognition and rewards. If we value our children and our parents, we should value those who teach and care for them. Access to and funding of higher education need thoughtful reanalysis and redefinition.

In the name of debt reduction, there exists today a serious threat to our nation's higher education loan program. But all of our Federal loan and scholarship programs combined would not pay the interest of the federal deficit for one week. Our priorities must be re-evaluated.

The Talented Teacher Act passed by Congress last year would provide $5,000-a-year scholarships to talented high school graduates in exchange for a commitment to teach two years for each year of federal support. That program remains unfunded. Not only is its authorization an urgent concern, but state and local governments, as well as our industries and corporations, must assume greater responsibility by instituting scholarships and tuition forgiveness programs in these areas of critical need.

We in higher education must respond not only to the developing needs of society, we also must become constructive agents actively involved in shaping change through the kinds and quality of the graduates we produce.

Put another way, we too must become change masters. Our students, whether prepared for teaching, counseling, business, law, or engineering, must be prepared for a life in which change will be the norm.

In this light, the current debate over curricula of our post-secondary institutions is misguided. Cloaking themselves in the rhetoric of quality and excellence, traditionalists have drawn themselves into a Liberal Arts camp, while those espousing practically-oriented and technically-based programs have established an opposing professional education camp. Their positions mirror an ideological fault line, often based on social class. It is a disservice to students and society.

Liberal arts and professional education are not opposites but complimentary elements of a total curriculum that educates for the future. Our graduates must not only be broadly educated critical thinkers, but pragmatic do-ers who are also imaginative dreamers.

We, in the academy, in our sometimes too comfortable environments, must resist becoming the high mandarins of the status quo. We have an obligation to be not merely the conservators of academic tradition, but the catalysts of progressive societal transformation.

We must make absolutely certain that our graduates are socially aware and responsible citizens. To ensure this, we need to be more than a mirror of the societies which nurture us. We must strive to be a model of a just community.

We should be places where people of color, people from diverse socio-economic backgrounds, ethnic groups, cultures, and creeds are seen as assets to enrich our understanding and our lives. We should be places where the only intolerance that exists is an intolerance of ignorance, prejudice, and stereotypes. We should be places where feminism flourishes; places where people are seen as human beings, then male and female; places where people may speak in "a different voice" and be heard; places where women and men can choose lifestyles of work, relationships, and parenting with the community's support.

Our task is by no means an easy one. Nearly 20 years ago, Robert Kennedy spoke to the dilemma of a society struggling to create a coherent image of its future in the midst of widespread social upheaval: "We will not find answers." Kennedy said, "in old dogmas, [or] by repeating outworn slogans, or fighting on ancient battlegrounds against fading enemies after the real struggle has moved on. We must re-think all our old ideas and beliefs before they capture and destroy us." His words have grown, if anything, more haunting, and more urgent. Have we grown enough in wisdom, yet, to heed them?

It may be undue opimism, but I believe we have. Faith, indeed, sometimes triumphs experience. And, thus, the future takes form composing itself through vision, experience and struggle.

At another inauguration, thirty-five years ago, the poet Archibald Macleish expressed the view that ". . . to educate at all is to profess a faith in the future of the world of the most explicit kind, since . . . education, by its nature, assumes a future."

In its first seventy-five years, Lesley College has demonstrated repeatedly, a singular ability to keep the faith, assume the future, and thereby shape the change. It is a college that has been a consistent innovator and proving ground for new curricula, pedagogies, and delivery systems for an ever growing and diverse number of students in our undergraduate school, graduate school and PMBI.

The college's capacity to innovate and grow to meet the changing needs of society and its students is one of its great strengths. In the coming years, that strength, as well as the wisdom and the optimism to face the future and shape the change, will be essential.

Nan Keohane, President of Wellesly College, incorporating the ideas of one of her predecesors, Mildred McAfee Horton, described a vision of a college as "a community as nearly ideal as possible, rising above all lines of discrimination, built upon cooperation and understanding sympathy as a bond between individuals." "Such a community would supply the rest of the world with an example of the joy of living in a rational social system."

I am convinced we can do this and more as together we create a new age for Lesley College.●

THE GRAZING FEE FORMULA

● Mr. DECONCINI. Mr. President, I read with great interest an article which appeared in the Washington Post Tuesday, January 28, 1986, reporting that the Office of Management and Budget is recommending that the current formula for the grazing of cattle on Bureau of Land Management and Forest Service lands be extended for the calendar year at current levels. This is one of those rare occasions, Mr. President, when I find myself in agreement with OMB. I was one of those 28 Senators who wrote a letter to the President urging him to maintain the existing grazing fee formula for BLM and Forest Service lands which expired December 31, 1985.

These are difficult times for agriculture in the United States, Mr. President. The times are no less difficult for those who depend on livestock production to earn their living. Retaining the present fee formula for ranchers who utilize Federal rangelands could mean the difference between making a living or going broke. In Western States, in particular, where large percentages of the total land base is in the hands of the Federal Government, there is very little opportunity for ranchers to utilize private lands. In addition, the condition of rangelands in arid regions of the Southwest are very different than the private grazing regions of the East and the Midwest. Normally, a larger land area is necessary to sustain the needs of one livestock. Additionally, there are costs unique to grazing on public lands that are not present on private rangelands for grazing has been an important force in promoting the stability of family farms and ranchers.

The present grazing fee formula was established by the Public Rangelands Improvement Act of 1978 and was the result of many years of study and negotiation involving agricultural interests, environmental groups, the executive branch, and the Congress. That formula has worked well over the years and should be continued without change.

The present formula utilizes a base value of $1.23 per animal unit month (an AUM is the amount of forage required to feed one cow or five sheep for 1 month). The base value was established as the fair market value of public grazing lands in a 1966 survey. In order to arrive at a fee which represents the current economic value of the land to the user, this base value is adjusted each year by two factors:

One. Annual changes in the lease rate for private grazing lands, and

Two. Annual fluctuations in the costs of beef production and the prices received for beef.

As I mentioned earlier, this grazing fee formula expired December 31, 1985. The President has the authority to extend the formula or make modifications unless the Congress acts. It is my hope that the President will act to continue the existing fee formula. Any increases could have a disastrous economic impact on the ranching industry in the West.●

NOTICE OF DETERMINATION BY THE SELECT COMMITTEE ON ETHICS

● Mr. RUDMAN. Mr. President, it is required by paragraph 4 of rule 35 that I place in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD notices of Senate employees who participate in programs, the principal objective of which is educational, sponsored by a foreign government or a foreign educational or charitable organization involving travel to a foreign country paid for by that foreign government or organization.

The select committee received a request for a determination under rule 35 for Ms. Regina Genton, a member of the staff of Senator ALAN CRANSTON, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Chinese Culture University, which took place from December 31, 1985 to January 8, 1986, and to participate in a program in the People's Republic of China, sponsored by the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs and organzied by the United States-China Friendship Program, which took place from January 9-11, 1986.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. Genton in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Chinese Culture University, and the program in the People's Republic of China, at the expense of the Chinese People's Institute of Foreign Affairs, was in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Mr. Daryl Owen, a member of the staff of Senator J. BENNETT JOHNSON, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Chinese Culture University, from January 1-10, 1986.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Owen in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Chinese Culture University, was in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Ms. Caroline Hooper Haynes (January 5-12, 1986) and Mr. Brent Erickson (December 31, 1985 through January 8, 1986), members of the staff of Senator ALAN SIMPSON, and Ms. Geraldine D. Hardy, (January 9-17, 1986), a staff member of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Chinese Culture University.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. Haynes, Ms. Hardy, and Mr. Erickson in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Chinese Culture University, was in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35, for Senator WILLIAM V. ROTH, Jr., to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Chinese National Association of Industry and Commerce, from January 13-18, 1986.

The committee has determined that participation by Senator ROTH in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Chinese National Association of Industry and Commerce, was in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35, for Mr. John Ritch and Mr. Peter Galbraith, members of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee staff, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Chinese National Association of Industry and Commerce, from January 10-17, 1986.

The committee has determined that participation by Messrs. Ritch and Galbraith in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Chinese National Association of Industry and Commerce, was in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35, for Mr. Ronald R. Mierzejewski, a member of the staff of Senator FRANK MURKOWSKI, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Chinese National Association of Industry and Commerce, from January 8-21, 1986.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Mierzejewski in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Chinese National Association of Industry and Commerce, was in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35, for Ms. Karen Kollmansperger, a member of the staff of Senator ERNEST HOLLINGS, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Chinese National Association of Industry and Commerce, From January 9-17, 1986.

The committee has determined that participation by Ms. Kollmansperger in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Chinese National Association of Industry and Commerce, was in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35, for Mr. Donald L. Hardy, a member of the staff of Senator ALAN SIMPSON, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Chinese National Association of Industry and Commerce, from January 9-17, 1986.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Hardy in the program in Taiwan, at the expense of the Chinese National Association of Industry and Commerce, was in the interest of the Senate and the United States.

The Select committee has received a request for a determination under rule 35 which would permit Mr. Craig Higgins, of the staff of Senator MARK O. HATFIELD, to participate in a program in Taiwan, sponsored by the Chinese National Association of Industry and Commerce, from January 9-17, 1986.

The committee has determined that participation by Mr. Higgins in the program, in Taiwan, at the expense of the Chinese National Association of Industry and Commerce, was in the interest of the Senate and the United States.●

ORDERS FOR THURSDAY

RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW AT 9:30 A.M.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that once the Senate completes its business today, it stand in recess until the hour of 9:30 a.m. on Thursday, January 30, 1986.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I further ask unanimous consent that following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, there be a special order in favor of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] for not to exceed 15 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, following the special order just identified, I ask unanimous consent that there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business, not to extend beyond the hour of 10 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER TO RESUME CONSIDERATION OF S. 638

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, at 10 a.m., the Senate will resume consideration of S. 638, the Conrail bill. The Senate will begin a series of amendments to the Danforth (committee substitute) amendment. Therefore rollcall votes can be expected.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the distinguished acting Republican leader get an order of the Senate to return to the consideration of the Conrail legislation at 10 a.m.? It will do that depending upon the closing of morning business and so on, but who knows? Even though the order says morning business cannot continue beyond that, it might.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that, at 10 o'clock tomorrow morning, the Senate turn to consideration of S. 638, the Conrail sale amendments bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I thank the Senator.

H.R. 4027 HELD AT DESK

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that H.R. 4027, dealing with the D.C. Revenue Bond

Act, be held at the desk pending further disposition.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL TOMORROW AT 9:30 A.M.

Mr. DANFORTH. Mr. President, I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate stand in recess until 9:30 a.m. tomorrow morning.

The motion was agreed to and, at 7:50 p.m., the Senate recessed until tomorrow, Thursday, January 30, 1986, at 9:30 a.m.

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

A COURAGEOUS CALL FOR ACTION TO STOP THE ANTI-HOUSING ELITISTS

HON. FERNAND J. ST GERMAIN

OF RHODE ISLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, housing programs are under the most concerted attack since the Federal Government accepted a role in helping to provide decent shelter for all Americans.

With these programs under siege and with the very future of housing and community development at risk, it is vital that people knowledgeable about the Nation's needs in this area speak up.

That is why, Mr. Speaker, I was so impressed by the gutsy remarks delivered by David O. Maxwell, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer of the Federal National Mortgage Association [Fannie Mae] to the board of directors of the National Association of Home Builders in Dallas on January 18.

Citing some of the outlandish proposals for cutting housing programs, the Fannie Mae chief lays it on the line in very clear language:

What the elitists seek to do is to put into law their antihousing bias under the cover of the deficit reduction package. That way, they can avoid careful consideration of these radical changes in housing policy in open forums established for this purpose, such as the Senate and House banking committees.

Mr. Maxwell went on to tell the NAHB:

As keepers of the American housing dream, we together must stop the ideological assault on homeownership. The halls of Congress should rock with our protest on behalf of half a century of bringing homeownership to Americans.

Mr. Speaker, I place in the RECORD the text of Mr. Maxwell's remarks in Dallas and commend them to anyone truly interested in preserving the Nation's commitment to decent housing for all Americans:

THE ATTACK ON MRS. BAKER'S HOUSING DREAM

(Remarks by David O. Maxwell, Chairman and Chief Executive Officer, the Federal National Mortgage Association)

It feels mighty good to get out of that stewpot called Washington to visit with friends.

Yes, America's home builders and Fannie Mae are good friends. Through good times and bad, we have stood up for each other. The result has been a standard of homeownership in America that is the envy of the world.

Like all good friends, we don't always agree completely on every issue. In fact, a lender friend of mine said to me that other day: "Your new underwriting standards must make speaking at the NAHB like Daniel in the lion's den." I don't believe that at all. I don't feel the need for divine intervention to get out of here alive. If I did, I'd have a long and very uncomfortable wait.

No, my friends, I feel more like Joshua than Daniel this morning. In the words of the spiritual, I want to command the children to shout and bring tumbling down the walls of those in Washington, who would, if we let them, destroy every vestige of support for the American dream of homeownership.

I want to make sure you leave here knowing what these elitists have in mind. Make no mistake about it, they are cold-bloodedly determined to drive the American home buyer into a ruinous competition for mortgage money with Wall Street merger maniacs and the tentacled, multinational octupi of the world. They will succeed—if we do not have the courage and determination to stop them.

Now, let me observe right up front that these are not issues affecting the federal budget deficit. The attack to which I refer is on the public-private partnership in support of housing that doesn't cost the taxpayers of this nation a penny. The attack is motivated solely by an ideological hostility to governmental support of any kind—on or off the budget—to give the low-, moderate- and middle-income home buyers of this country a chance to compete for capital.

These people are cleverly disguising their attack by wrapping it in the flag of deficit reduction—a national priority we all support. By using such camouflage, they do the President a great disservice.

I've never heard President Reagan say he wanted to tear down all the supports that have made us a nation of homeowners. I've never heard him advocate destruction of institutions that help low- and moderate-income Americans buy homes without a penny's cost to the taxpayers. But that's what they would like to accomplish.

I don't have to tell you Fannie Mae is a major target of the conspiracy in Washington against home buyers of modest means. But I should tell you, as good friends, how disheartening this assault is to us. We have worked for five years to turn our company around. We have not burdened the Administration, or the American people, with the need for some kind of expensive bail-out.

Our turnaround strategy is well on the road to success. From a company that was losing $1 million every working day in 1981, we have earned a solid profit in 1985. And we look to the future with optimism.

I know this achievement is of special interest to you because we have weathered the hard times of the 1980s together. I will always be proud that so many home builders told us after the recession of 1981-82 that without Fannie Mae they would not have made it through. My friends, without you, we would not have made it through either.

And now that Fannie Mae is back on her feet, you can be certain she'll always be there when you need her.

Obviously someone needed us in 1985. Our business volumes set a record for us. We purchased $21 billion of mortgages for our portfolio. We issued $24 billion of Mortgage-Backed Securities. That $45 billion translates into more than 900,000 home mortgages for Americans in 1985 alone. We will be just as aggressive in the marketplace in 1986.

We will be equally conscious of quality. We intend to stick to the basic changes we made last year in our underwriting standards and mortgage credit criteria, because we believe they are right. We did not make those changes because of the foreclosure losses from loans made in the recession of 1981-82. That cat is out of the bag. We have learned to live with all the unwanted kittens she has produced. And that's a lot of unwanted kittens. Rather, we made our underwriting changes for two fundamental reasons:

First: The current economic evironment is radically different from the 1970's. Housing price inflation will no longer make up for underwriting mistakes. It would be foolhardy for us to do business as if nothing had changed.

Second: Our experience clearly shows that certain loan products and features lead with near certainty to foreclosure for many borrowers. It would be irresponsible for us to continue to offer those products and features.

To continue to accept high levels of foreclosures from loans we're making now could undermine the integrity of the home mortgage as a sound investment. Investors without faith in the underlying quality of their investment would not continue to invest. Our industry would soon have trouble raising the capital to finance future housing needs. So our changes were an important step to maintain investors' faith in the home mortgage.

Mixed with our business decision to make the changes was an overriding moral concern. Our industry doesn't want to see people buy homes they can't keep. Owning a home should be an experience to treasure, not regret. It is better for a family to postpone the purchase of a home until they can meet the monthly payments. It is better for a family to lower their expectations of how much house they can afford than to get in over their heads. It is better for a family to forego purchase of a home than to go through the agony of foreclosure.

What has been the reaction to our underwriting changes? Generally speaking, highly favorable. Naturally we could not fully satisfy every player in the marketplace and still effectively reduce credit risk. At the same time, we realize that no such changes are perfect. So, we continue to monitor them in response to customers' concerns. Where we can respond to those concerns without reopening the door to undue exposure to credit risk, we will do so.

I want to thank John Koelemij and Kent Colton for presenting NAHB's own reservations and suggestions to us candidly and forcefully. In our several meetings with John and Kent, we reviewed the underwriting rules and their effects in great detail. As a result, effective immediately, we are making several refinements in our new rules. I appreciate the opportunity to make the first public announcement of these refinements here at the NAHB's Board meeting today.

First, we will lift our prohibition on seller contributions to adjustable-rate mortgages with less than ten percent down. A seller will be allowed to pay closing or financing costs of these loans up a maximum of two percent of the sales price or appraised value, whichever is less.

Second, the current six percent limitation on contributions to fixed- and adjustable-rate mortgages with 25 percent or more down will be increased to nine percent of the sale price or appraised value, whichever is less.

Third, points on unplanned permanent buydowns will not be limited if they are incurred solely as a result of shifts in interest rates between the time of signing a sales contract and closing the loan.

Fourth, if an immediate family member makes a gift of at least 20 percent of the sales price, we will waive our requirement that a borrower must make a five percent downpayment in cash.

Fifth, our current definition of long-term debt, which includes all installment and revolving debt, will be changed to include only that installment and revolving debt that extends beyond ten months.

Sixth, we will streamline our documentation requirements to speed up approvals for loans with low loan-to-value ratios—loans that represent a more significant portion of our builder business than many of you might imagine.

In new lender guides Fannie Mae will distribute this month, we are including these refinements and clearing up misunderstandings, including one that has caused home builders concern: our 25/33 percent income standard for fixed-rate mortgages above the 90 percent loan-to-value ratio. Some have said this standard is set in concrete. It isn't. And it never was.

Let me repeat: We will allow lenders to go as high as 28/36 percent if there is sound justification for doing so. We want to buy high ratio loans of good quality.

We're also including in the guides a clarified appraisal policy. We have stood with NAHB in rejecting the mechanistic and unrealistic approach of "cash equivalent" appraisals. Fannie Mae will require appraisers to report sales concessions for comparables where the information is reasonably available. They then should adjust values based on the actual effect such concessions have on those values.

We believe these refinements, taken together, substantially address the concerns expressed to us by NAHB and others without sacrificing, in any way, our commitment to loan quality. Of course, Fannie Mae will keep its doors open for further discussion with you. You are true friends. You came to our side in last year's user fee battle, and helped to win that fight. That battle was part of a much larger war against governmental support for housing. It is led by those elitists I mentioned earlier. Their command post is the Office of Management and Budget.

The scope of their attack in recent years has been epitomized by their treatment of HUD's budget.

HUD's budget, including federally assisted housing, has been cut 65 percent since 1981.

None of us would argue that these programs should not bear their fair share of budget cuts. But 65 percent?

If other federal spending had been cut so deeply, there would be no deficit today.

Although their final 1987 budget proposals have not been formally released, it's well known what these anti-housing zealots aim to do next. And I know the NAHB shares my deep shock at what we have heard.

They want to double the downpayment required for FHA and VA mortgages.

They want to cap the income level to qualify for an FHA loan at $40,000.

They want to limit Ginnie Mae's guarantee to only 80 percent, instead of 100 percent, of a loan.

They want to further cut HUD's budget for low-income housing assistance.

They want to gut rural housing.

They want to impose a confiscatory tax on government sponsored housing enterprises, a tax that would hit especially hard at Fannie Mae.

They even had the audacity to float the idea of selling FHA, which is the same thing as abolishing it. Fortunately, that balloon was quickly popped. But don't think you've heard the last of that FHA proposal. These people are tenacious. Even though we defeated their housing tax proposal last year, they are right back with an even more destructive housing tax this year.

The consequences of their attack, if successful, would be disastrous for millions of potential home buyers.

By capping the income requirement at $40,000 for FHA buyers, they would eliminate about one-third of the people who bought homes through FHA last year.

By reducing the Ginnie Mae guarantee to 80 percent, they would—in the words of Warren Lasko, one of the most knowledgeable experts on Ginnie Mae in this country: "absolutely pull the rug out from under the Ginnie Mae program."

And who would be hurt by the tax on Fannie Mae? Not a rich home buyer. No buyers of $200,000 homes need worry. The average size of the home loans we purchased in 1985 was about $50,000. The average size of a loan in our portfolio and in MBS pools is about $40,000. Those are not the mortgages of rich people. They are the mortgages of American families Fannie Mae was created to serve.

What would happen to these families if this tax were enacted?

OMB itself admits this tax would cost Fannie Mae more than $1 billion over the next five years. Whether we pass that cost on or not, this would signal the end of Fannie Mae's ability to provide affordable mortgage money to home buyers.

Why are these OMB bureaucrats making such reckless proposals? Fannie Mae and Freddie Mac are not part of the federal budget. These enterprises cost the taxpayer nothing.

No, what the elitists seek to do is to put into law their antihousing bias under cover of the deficit reduction package. That way, they can avoid careful consideration of these radical changes in housing policy in open forums established for this purpose, such as the Senate and House banking committees.

The OMB assault against housing is so bitter and so farreaching, one is tempted to ask:

Where do these elitists live?

Have they never had to buy a house through FHA, or VA, or a Fannie Mae approved lender?

Obviously, they have not driven a nail, used a mason's trowel, or spliced a joint. Nor have they stood with you in a barren field with the blueprints for homes to be built for Americans because there is an FHA, a VA, a Ginnie May, a Fannie Mae.

I would wager that none of them would be moved by a passage from Russell Baker's book, "Growing Up," in which he simply and eloquently sums up what the dream of a home is all about. He writes:

"I'd never seen my mother more radiantly happy than the day we moved in. The house was on Marydell Road in the Irvington section of Baltimore. For my mother it was that 'home of our own' she had talked about from my earliest memory. It was the place of permanence, the permanence embodied for her in the word 'home.' She was to live there for the next 35 years."

That's what our business is all about—giving Americans a chance to fulfill one of the most important parts of the American dream. No other part of that dream is shared so widely by Americans. From the first wave of immigrants who came to industrialize America, to the new generation of Americans that is computerizing her, the common dream was and is that of Mrs. Baker: "to have a home of our own, a place of permanence."

In this country, as nowhere else in the world, we have shaped our political will to make certain that the opportunity for homeownership is not just for a privileged few. We have forged a public-private partnership to put homeownership within reach of most Americans. It has transformed a nation of immigrants into a nation of homeowners.

Before the partnership was formed, only 44 percent of American families could claim homeownership, out of a population of 130 million. Now—only 50 years later—65 percent claim that homeownership, out of a population of 235 million.

And it is not just the fact that they own a home, it's the kind of home they own. Its size, its amenities, its materials—all those things that you—the builders—put into the American home to make it the envy of the world.

As keepers of the American housing dream, we together must stop the ideological assault on homeownership. The halls of Congress should rock with our protest on behalf of half a century of bringing homeownership to Americans.

BUDGET HYSTERIA: A COLOSSAL MYTHOLOGY

HON. G. WILLIAM WHITEHURST

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Speaker, so much has been written and said about budget deficits and how to reduce them that I am sure few, if any, Americans are sure of just what is the best way to proceed.

It is for this reason that I am pleased to share with my colleagues at this point in the RECORD the column by Robert J. Samuelson which appeared in the Wednesday, January 29, 1986, Washington Post. His restraint and lucidity are refreshing, especially in contrast to much of the rhetoric which has assailed us from all sides in recent months.

I commend Mr. Samuelson's commentary to my colleagues, and hope that his cogent views will be given the careful consideration they deserve.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE MYTHOLOGY OF DEFICITS

It's budget time again. Washington has resumed its obsession with budget deficits. You will hear much that is confusing and wrong. The foremost myth is this: Closing the deficits requires a massive retrenchment of government or huge tax increases. Don't believe it. The truth is that a combination of modes tax increases, selective cutbacks in domestic spending and a further slowdown of the defense buildup would shrink the deficits quickly.

Deficits have become a stubborn political problem only because we have made them so. Deflating the deficits involves paying a little more, receiving a little less. It's a thunderstorm, not a typhoon. You never would know it from Washington's clamor and clatter. Deficits have created a high-pitched political schizophrenia. Closing them is essential, but doing so would be unbearably painful. Debate over Gramm-Rudman-Hollings—the law that supposedly requires a balanced budget by 1991—simply has raised the rhetorical hysteria to new heights.

Politics is about conflict and choice. The conflicts and choices engaged by the deficits are relatively ordinary. Compare them with some landmark legislative events of our era: passage of the Civil Rights Act (1964), Medicare (1965) and the environmental legislation of the 1970s. All these involved basic changes in the ways the nation conducts its affairs. Can the same be said of trimming guaranteed student college loans—to cite one proposed spending cut—or raising taxes 6 percent?

From the outset, budget deficits have inspired a colossal mythology. Consider:

Myth. President Reagan created the deficits by cutting taxes and raising defense spending.

Reality. Any president would have faced unpopular choices. By the late 1970s, the budget had reached a political impasse. In 1979, defense spending was the lowest proportion of gross national product since 1948. Taxes were at postwar highs. Interest expenses on the federal debt were held down by undesirably low—inflationary—interest rates. An aging population and high health care costs were raising Social Security and Medicare spending automatically. The consensus was to raise defense spending and reduce inflation. President Reagan's agenda sharpened the conflicts, but he did not create them. Even with his tax cut, the tax burden in 1985 equaled the 1970s' average.

Myth. High budget deficits caused high interest rates, leading to the dollar's high exchange rate and the huge trade deficit.

Reality. The 1980's high interest rates mainly reflect a deliberate decision by the Federal Reserve to raise rates to halt the 1970s' inflation. Rates rose well before large deficits emerged. A study by economist Frederic Mishkin of Columbia University attributes most of the rate rise to Federal Reserve policy. Economists Lawrence Summers of Harvard University and Olivier Blanchard of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology found that the Federal Reserve triggered the higher rates, although deficits played a role after 1982. Reducing budget deficits might provide some rate relief, but relatively high interest rates may be a necessary antidote to inflation.

Myth. Cutting the deficits requires draconian tax increases or spending cuts.

Reality. They would be draconian only if spending cuts or tax increases absorbed the full burden of deficit reduction. By contrast, consider a combination. A 25-cent-a-gallon oil excise tax would raise about $50 billion; the tax increase would be between 5 and 7 percent, and—with oil prices falling—might not raise retail prices. Higher cigarette and alcohol taxes could yield $5 billion. Another $30 billion could be saved by eliminating less important domestic programs (examples: Amtrack, the Small Business Administration), imposing user fees for some government services and freezing for a year the cost-of-living adjustments for Social Security and other retirement programs. A defense slowdown could produce between $20 billion and $30 billion in savings.

Any packages of more than $100 billion of spending cuts and tax increases actually would yield larger deficit reductions. Why? First, it would lower government borrowing and interest expenses. And second, taxes already are increasing slightly faster than spending. No one pretends the necessary changes are painless, but bipartisan posturing has exaggerated the pain. Reagan portrays any tax increase as a catastrophe. Congressional Democrats wildly accuse the president of trying to gut all social legislation since the New Deal.

Common sense is the main reason for dealing with the deficits. They are no way to run a government. Their evils are long term, and they are as much political as economic. Uncorrected, deficits become worse as interest expenses accumulate. The longer this continues, the more wrenching the political decisions necessary to reduce the deficits. The political stalemate erodes public esteem for government. And, sooner or later, persistent deficits risk either reduced investment or, because the Federal Reserve would create money to cover the deficits, renewed inflation.

But it matters how deficits are reduced. Mindless spending cuts, as ordained by Gramm-Rudman-Hollings, could cripple many worthy government programs. No spending cuts could result in crippling tax increases. Deficits are not unmanageable, but the first step to managing them is to regain perspective. They are more than a molehill, but a lot less than a mountain.

SALT II ENHANCES PROSPECTS FOR ARMS CONTROL

HON. DANTE B. FASCELL

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. FASCELL. Mr. Speaker, last month I sent a letter to the President encouraging his continued adherence to SALT II in 1986 beyond the expiration date of December 31, 1985.

Yesterday I received a formal and positive response from the Department of State which I would like to share with my colleagues.

In this letter the administration wisely reiterates the President's view that success in Geneva is enhanced by continued adherence by both superpowers to existing strategic arms agreements.

Furthermore, in stating that "Our position on SALT II is * * * we will live under its agreements and not violate them," the administration has wisely rejected the ill-advised counsel of the Department of Defense to respond to Soviet violations of SALT II with United States violations of that treaty.

Earlier this month, our distinguished colleague, Congressman LEE HAMILTON, wrote a very important editorial which appeared in the January 16 Christian Science Monitor on the need to preserve U.S. adherence to the SALT II Treaty. Representative HAMILTON points out that while official U.S. policy is not to undercut the SALT II agreement, there are elements in the administration pushing to "scrap" the treaty.

He goes on to explain a number of reasons why continued adherence to the treaty is our interest, including the fact that the treaty establishes equal limits on bombers and missiles, freezes the number of allowed warheads per missile and restricts Soviet land-based missiles which are of most concern to the United States.

Representative HAMILTON reminds us that charges of Soviet noncompliance with the treaty are best dealt with through private diplomatic channels such as the Standing Consultative Commission [SCC] which was designed for this very purpose. Based on his analysis of the issue, Representative HAMILTON concludes that while the Soviets have pushed the SALT II Treaty to the limits, their actions "do not constitute massive violations that suggest a Soviet effort to break out of the treaty."

I would agree with my colleague that without SALT II we would face an accelerated arms race and increased tensions between the superpowers. We also are much more likely to reach an agreement with the Soviet Union in the ongoing arms control negotiations in Geneva if we maintain our adherence to SALT II and build off that important agreement.

The text of the letter from the Department of State and Representative HAMILTON'S editorial follow.

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF STATE,
Washington, DC, January 28, 1986.

Hon. DANTE B. FASCELL,
Chairman, Committee on Foreign Relations, House of Representatives.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: I am writing you as a follow-up to Mr. Oglesby's letter on SALT II of January 2, 1986. First let me add the Department's thanks for your support of the President's decision of last June. There is no question that the wise and constructive leadership you have demonstrated as Chairman is vital to the effective conduct of our country's foreign affairs, including our arms control policies.

As you know, the President determined last June that it is in our interest to work toward the establishment of an interim framework of truly mutual restraint on strategic offensive arms as we pursue at Geneva our goal of real reductions in nuclear arsenals. The United States will continue to refrain from undercutting existing strategic arms agreements to the extent that the Soviet Union exercises comparable restraint and provided that the Soviet Union actively pursues arms reduction agreements in Geneva. This remains our policy.

The United States cannot establish this framework alone. We have called upon the Soviet Union to take concrete, positive steps to correct their noncompliance with existing arms control agreements, and halt or substantially reduce their massive military buildup. We will reserve the right to take appropriate and proportionate responses to Soviet noncompliance as necessary in order to deny the military benefits of these violations to the Soviet Union and assure the national security of the U.S. and our Allies.

Our position on SALT II is that we have indicated we will live under its agreements and not violate them. Until we say differently, the policy remains the same. The December 31, 1985, date for the expiring of SALT II had no effect on this policy.

With best wishes,

Sincerely,

WILLIAM L. BALL III,
Assistant Secretary, Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs.

WHY U.S. SHOULD CONTINUE TO ADHERE TO SALT II

(By Lee H. Hamilton)

The future of the unratified SALT II Treaty, which has limited United States and Soviet nuclear forces since 1979, is unclear. The Reagan administration is divided. Some officials want to scrap SALT II, but the President announced last June that the US would follow a "no undercut" policy of adhering to treaty limits so long as the Soviet Union "exercise comparable restraint." This is still official policy.

The President also said that the US would study "proportionate responses" to what it views as the military consequences of Soviet violations of arms agreements. With the expiration of SALT II on Dec. 31, 1985, the US may decide to pursue arms programs that breach treaty limits. Such a decision could end all restraints on US and Soviet nuclear forces.

There are several reasons the US should continue to adhere to the terms of SALT II. This conclusion is shared by a recent study by the Arms Control Association, "Countdown on SALT II."

First, SALT II establishes equal limits on bombers and missiles and freezes the number of allowed warheads per missile. It establishes restrictive sublimits on Soviet land-based missiles, which concern the US the most. Every time the Soviets introduce a new missile, they are obligated under SALT to retire one as well. According to the Arms Control Association, the Soviet Union removed 1,007 land-based missiles and 233 sea-based missiles from its active force and dismantled 13 submarines during 1972-85 to comply with SALT II limits. Past Soviet practices suggest that without SALT II much of this hardware would still be in operation.

Second, SALT II is in the US interests because Soviet missile production lines remain open. According to open testimony by the Central Intelligence Agency, the Soviets could add 12,000 new warheads by the mid-1990s—more than doubling their present force—if they broke out of SALT II. The Soviets could also put up to 20 or 30 warheads on each "heavy" missile, giving them a much greater capacity to attack US targets. It is unlikely that the US could keep pace without enormous spending increases.

Third, the end of SALT II and a renewed missile race would likely eliminate the possibility of developing a successful US space-based missile defense. This is the conclusion of the congressional Office of Technology Assessment. The Reagan administration implicitly acknowledges this in its proposal for deep missile cuts as part of its proposal for the Strategic Defense Initiative (SDI). Without missile limits, SDI cannot work; without SALT II there would be none.

Fourth, the end of SALT II would free the Soviets to adopt camouflage and deception techniques, now prohibited under SALT, to hide military activities.

Finally, serious political consequences are likely if SALT II is abandoned. The Geneva talks would suffer a big setback. So would the broader US-Soviet relationship. The end of SALT II would be deeply divisive in Congress and would lead to serious differences within NATO, strengthening Soviet efforts to split the alliance.

The crux of the argument against SALT II focuses on alleged Soviet violations of the treaty. First, the US contends that the Soviets have introduced two new types of land-based missiles, the SS-24 and SS-25, whereas SALT II permits only one. The Soviets declare that the SS-25 is a permitted modernization of the SS-13. The US disputes this, charging that the Soviets have violated SALT II by concealing SS-25 tests. This question is unresolved.

Second, the US accuses the Soviets of encoding missile test-flight data necessary for verification purposes. This charge is certainly true, but the US has refused to specify the missile test data it needs for verification, fearing possible compromise of intelligence sources and methods. This violation is, therefore, less than clear cut.

Third, a new US charge is that the Soviets have deployed launchers in excess of SALT II limits. Others question this, since the US has delayed working out agreed procedures under SALT II for dismantling Soviet bombers. A further US charge, concerning the banned SS-16 missile, has been downgraded in view of Soviet steps that seem to have resolved the issue.

It is my belief that the Soviets have pushed the SALT II Treaty to the limit. Charges of Soviet noncompliance are serious matters concerning gray areas of treaty interpretation, but they do not constitute massive violations that suggest a Soviet effort to break out of the treaty. Our response should not be to renounce SALT II but to draft more careful treaty language in the future and to press our present concerns through the private diplomatic channels of the Standing Consultative Commission created for this purpose. We should pursue our complaints in a manner that keeps the treaty intact. Compliance issues must be handled with accuracy and care, because, if exaggerated, they will destroy any prospects for a new agreement and undermine all existing agreements.

Sticking with SALT II serves US interests, as the current debate demonstrates. Without SALT II, we are likely to experience an accelerated arms race, greater uncertainty about Soviet intentions, and an escalation of tension between the superpowers. We will be less secure. With SALT II, we will be able to preserve important constraints on Soviet weapons, improve our ability to resolve questions about Soviet compliance, and increase prospects for future arms agreements at Geneva. Few choices are so clear cut.

A GOAL IS NOT A QUOTA

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, there has been much confusion of late with regard to the Federal Government's affirmative action policy. News reports indicate that Attorney General Meese is quarrelling with other high ranking administration officials over Executive Order 11246. Mr. Meese implies that the Federal Government's current policy somehow involves the use of quotas when employing minority contractors and businesses doing work for the Government. Is Mr. Meese correct?

I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention an article by the Washington representative of the American Jewish Committee, Mr. Hyman Bookbinder. Mr. Bookbinder lays to rest some of the misconceptions surrounding Executive Order 11246. This article appeared in the January 27 Washington Times. Apparently the Washington Times is part of President Reagan's daily reading. Let's hope he did not miss this perceptive piece.

The article follows:

IS THE REAL ISSUE QUOTAS?

(By Hyman Bookbinder)

Confusion continues to surround the issue of affirmative action—especially the issue of goals and quotas. President Reagan soon may act on a proposal before him which could have a major impact on where this nation goes in its commitment to equal opportunity. His decision, if based on facts rather than fears and distortions, should be rejection of the proposal.

The proposal, urged by Attorney General Edwin Meese, is to change an executive order supported by every president and secretary of labor and attorney general in the past 25 years—and that includes Republican presidents Richard Nixon and Gerald Ford. The executive order was based on a simple but critical premise: federal contractors and federal agencies should set an example for all American society by taking approriate action to assure equality of opportunity in employment regardless of race, creed, color, or national origin—and, subsequently, sex.

In 1971, Mr. Nixon's secretary of labor, George Shultz—currently Mr. Reagan's secretary of state—determined that among "appropriate" actions was the setting of "goals and timetables" for contractors doing business with the federal government. Because of the widespread misinterpretations and confusion about this concept—including the piece by Victor Riesel on Jan. 21—it is important to study carefully the precise language of the regulation issued under the executive order during the Nixon-Shultz administration:

"The goals and timetables developed by the contractor should be attainable in terms of the contractor's analysis of its deficiencies and its entire affirmative action program. . . . The contractor should consider the results which could reasonably be expected from its putting forth every good faith effort to make its overall affirmative action work. . . ."

And to make sure that contractors understand these requirements, the regulation goes on to state unambiguously:

"Goals may not be rigid and inflexible quotas which must be met, but must be targets reasonably attainable by means of applying every good faith effort. . . ."

In the years prior to this 1971 mandating of goals—not quotas—affirmative action had come to mean primarily programs directed at improved training and retraining, at more effective recruitment procedures, at evaluation of testing methods, and encouragement of nondiscriminatory policies. While these have brought about some positive results, a consensus developed in both government circles and in the civil rights community that more progress was both needed and possible—and that such progress required the setting of reasonable, realistic targets.

Such targets would serve twin purposes: (1) as a measuring rod for goals set by the employer based upon careful analysis of the available labor market, and (2) thereby as a prod for recalcitrant or indifferent labor managers.

That this system of goals and timetables has not become a de facto quota system—i.e., one in which given numbers or percentages of workers of a given racial or other group must be hired—is perhaps most forcefully demonstrated in the fact that in the last five years only two cases have resulted in contractors being punished for failing to meet their goals. In the overwhelming majority of cases, in fact, the goals were not reached, but did serve to improve past performance. Good faith effort is the criterion for compliance.

There have been tens of thousands of "goals" programs administered by contractors and also by public agencies. It would be absurd to argue that never in all these cases has a goal been distorted into a de facto quota. I surely do not. Either out of ignorance or defiance or overzealousness, here and there a hiring officer will in effect be engaged in a quota operation. What major program—tax collection, defense costs, environmental laws—is entirely free of abuse?

The answer to such abuse is more rigid administration, and punishment of the abusers. The answer is not to throw the proverbial baby out with the bathwater.

I have testified on numerous occasions on this question before congressional bodies. Each time I have challenged critics of the goals program to cite reliable studies to sustain the charge that goals have generally become quotas. There is no such study.

There is a quota issue with which the courts are now dealing. There are some cases where the courts have made findings of conscious discrimination—primarily affecting employees of local jurisdictions—and have approved the use of quotas to correct such proved discrimination.

But the present argument over the attorney general's plans to change the executive order is not about quotas. That order now prohibits such quotas. The proposed change would ban goals, and thus set back the cause of affirmative action seriously.

Small wonder then that a most impressive array of opponents of Mr. Meese's proposal has developed. Small wonder that the White House has delayed action—given the size and the nature of the opposition:

Sixty-nine U.S. senators and more than 200 representatives have asked the president not to change the order—including Senate Majority Leader Robert Dole and House Minority Leader Robert H. Michel.

Labor Secretary William Brock and Secretary of State George Shultz, plus at least five other Cabinet members, say "no" to the proposed change.

The National Association of Manufacturers, the Business roundtable, and the New York Chamber of Commerce are spearheading a business effort against the Meese proposal.

Finally, and closed to home, a word about the American Jewish community. Perhaps no other segment in American life is more opposed to quotas. We have suffered too much from them in the past. But despite the one organization cited by Victor Riesel, the Jewish community is overwhelmingly united in support of affirmative action, including the judicious and prudent use of goals and timetable—the present system.

WITH THE CONTRAS

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, even in the era of Gramm-Rudman, some would like to spend fresh millions to subsidize the depredations of the "Contras" in Nicaragua. Before we vote to appropriate another dollar for this purpose, we should take a hard look at what our funds have purchased so far. It is a grim record indeed, as Christopher Dickey's book, "With the Contras: A Reporter in the Wilds of Nicaragua," amply demonstrates.

Abraham Brumberg's review of Mr. Dickey's book was published in the New York Times Book Review for January 26, 1986. I commend it to the attention of all Members of the House.

CLIMATE OF AN UNDECLARED WAR

(By Abraham Brumberg)

The story of the anti-Sandinista guerrillas, the so-called contras, once a rag-tag band of 500 survivors of Anastasio Debayle Somoza's notorious National Guard of Nicaragua, now a force of more than 15,000 men—well-equipped, professionally trained and energetically looked after by its foreign patrons—is well worth telling. Until about two years ago the Sandinistas, keen on depriving their enemies of any claim to legitimacy, were apt to dismiss the contras as either mercenaries or diehard "Somocistas." Champions of the contras, on the other hand, above all President Reagan, often consider them lineal descendants of America's Founding Fathers, valiant freedom fighters determined to deliver their countrymen from the tyrannical reign of Communist totalitarianism. While few people give credence to the Sandinista version—and indeed while the Sandinistas themselves have become increasingly realistic in their assessment of the rebels—the far more extravagant claims for them of the Reagan Administration continue to flourish.

Christopher Dickey, a reporter who covered Central America for The Washington Post from January 1980 to September 1983, set out to provide an account of the contras that would steer clear of the tendentious images fostered by their friends and adversaries alike. For nearly six years he collected firsthand evidence from the insurgents in the jungles of Nicaragua, Honduras and Costa Rica, and from their spokesmen in Miami. He interviewed American officials, as well as representatives of the Sandinista National Liberation Front, Nicaragua's ruling party. And he spent several dangerous and grueling weeks in the spring of 1983 with one of the rebel groups in northern Nicaragua.

For some reason—I might as well register my objection at the outset—Mr. Dickey chose to present his findings in the form neither of a straightforward narrative nor of a thematically organized essay, but rather in the vein of a grade-B thriller, replete with the mannerisms characteristic of the genre—abrupt and bewildering cuts from one incident to another; lurid passages; far-fetched similes and metaphors ("He could strike chords of abandonment, tune her passion for revenge," and the like)—all of it odd for a writer whose prose I have always found lucid and elegant.

Yet it would be a mistake to dismiss the book because of its stylistic solecisms. With all its flaws, it succeeds better than any account I have seen in capturing the sordid climate of the undeclared war in which thus far nearly 12,000 Nicaraguans have lost their lives, and in tracing its bloody, convoluted history. (All of his sources are scrupulously listed, chapter by chapter.) Mr. Dickey's views will not necessarily please the Sandinistas, but they will also certainly provide no comfort to their foes, either in Central America or in the United States. The contra commanders, he writes—many of them former "Somocistas," others blood relations of former National Guardsmen—are men addicted to violence. Their brutality is indiscriminate—their victims include Government officials (health workers, agricultural specialists, teachers, all carefully selected targets for torture, rape and murder), rank-and-file soldiers in the Sandinista armed forces, few of them lucky enough to remain alive when taken prisoner, and local campesinos suspected of sympathizing with the Sandinistas. Though the rebel groups have been brought together into one organization (UNO, an acronym for United Nicaraguan Opposition), they remain for all intents and purposes semi-independent, each one headed by a minor caudillo bent on exacting total loyalty from his disciples (including many women) and prone to bouts of murderous fury at the slightest sign of insubordination.

Mr. Dickey's portraits of these men, "who loved to kill," many of them bearing grim noms de guerre ("Suicida," "Cancer," "El Muerto"), reveal a world where political commitment is indistinguishable from the need to flaunt one's machismo, and where personal jealousies among the various commanders often erupt into bloody vendettas. Many Nicaraguans, including former Sandinistas, have joined the contras—some under coercion, others out of conviction, some because of rumbling stomachs, other who feared the expropriation of their farms, and some who wanted to escape a political climate that increasingly blurs the distinction between counterrevolution and legitimate dissent. They soon find themselves swept into the "freedom fighters" vortex of mayhem and corruption. Many decide to stay. Yet those who want to leave find it nearly impossible: the penalties for attempted desertion are savage. Mr. Dickey's description of some of these incidents (including a particularly sickening description of El Muerto cutting the throat of a 13-year-old "deserter") is often based on the testimony of those few who have managed to escape, but it is altogether in keeping with the reports of various human rights organizations on the subject. (See, for instance, the Americas Watch Report, "Human Rights in Nicaragua," New York, July 1985.)

Are the leaders of the contras—in Honduras, Miami or Washington—aware of these atrocities? Mr. Dickey's book leaves no doubt about it. The manual "Psychological Operations in Guerrilla Warfare," prepared at the behest of the Central Intelligence Agency for use by the contras—to which Mr. Dickey devotes several pages—was produced, in Mr. Dickey's words, "to keep 'implicit and explicit terror' under control." Killings are discussed in the sections of the manual dealing with advice about the way the rebels can best "neutralize carefully selected and planned targets," which clearly refers to assassinations or executions of civilians, and in the section on the creation of "a 'martyr' for the cause" (in the English translation published by Vintage Books, 1985). The most prominent contra military leader who openly proclaimed his revulsion for these practices, and who has refused to make common cause with the "Somocista" leaders of the Nicaraguan Democratic Force (F.D.N.—the largest of the contra groups) is Edén Pastora Gómez, one of the heroes of the 1979 uprising. Unfortunately, Mr. Pastora, for all his hatred of the former Guardsmen, emerges from Mr. Dickey's description as little better than his right-wing competitors—boastful, eager for personal power and glory, ready to be financed by the C.I.A., only to be abandoned by it when he could no longer provide the promised army to overthrow his former comrades and refused to merge his guerrillas with those of the Democratic Force. Mr. Dickey does not discuss extensively the role of Arturo Cruz, former Nicaraguan Ambassador to the United States under the Sandinistas. Mr. Cruz, whom he calls one of "the best minds of the revolution," once worked with Mr. Pastora and denounced the extreme behavior of the Democratic Force. Today, Mr. Cruz is one of the principal leaders and spokesmen of UNO, the rebel guerrillas' umbrella organization. On the other hand, as Mr. Dickey points out, a former contra leader, Edgar Chamorro, a member of the Democratic Force Directorate, has quit the contras in disgust over the atrocities and cynical manipulations of the C.I.A.

Mr. Dickey's book is most valuable on the American role in organizing, directing and selling the not-so-secret "secret war" to Congress and the American public. At first managed by a small collection of men drawn from several Government agencies and known as the Core Group (composed, as one of its members told Mr. Dickey with unconscious irony, exclusively of "hardliners" and "ideologues"), the war's handling was eventually turned over entirely to the C.I.A. Operatives of the C.I.A., with plenty of cash available, fanned out to Honduras and Costa Rica to train rebel forces in the use of sophisticated weapons (at first with the help of the Argentine military before the Falklands War) and to bribe scores of local newspaper reporters and radio broadcasters into praising the virtues of the contras and calling for the overthrow of the Nicaraguan Government. As Mr. Dickey shows, when the rebels proved unequal to the task, the C.I.A. began to stage its own operations, using Latin American employees known as "unilaterally controlled Latino assets." Once these operations—attacks on Nicaraguan ports and oil refineries, and the mining of several harbors in January 1984—had been executed, the Democratic Force would be "instructed" to claim responsibility, though it had not even been informed of the C.I.A.'s plans beforehand.

What emerges most starkly from Mr. Dickey's account is that, despite the reservations of some American officials, Mr. Reagan and his closest advisers (including the head of the C.I.A., William Casey) were from the very start determined to pursue policies aimed at overthrowing the Nicaraguan Government. Claims that the purpose of providing funds to the rebels was to interdict the flow of weapons to the Salvadoran insurgents (for which, as Mr. Dickey notes, no persuasive evidence has been produced since 1981) were unalloyed lies. So were the declarations, repeatedly made to Congress, that the contras were to be used merely to wrest political concessions from the Sandinistas. As one C.I.A. "briefer" told Mr. Dickey: "Nobody wanted to say they [the contras] were going to overthrow them. But obviously that was the idea."

Now into its fifth year, the war goes on, and no end is in sight. Though the rebels have been unable to capture and hold a single slice of Nicaraguan territory—apparently much to the dismay of the C.I.A., whose scenario envisioned the establishment of a provisional government on Nicaraguan soil, which would be promptly recognized by the United States and openly provided with massive military aid—the Administration shows no sign of abandoning its long-term objective. And while some members of Congress would prefer to call a halt to the war and explore a diplomatic solution to the conflict, their views are stymied by most of their colleagues, who seem to want it both ways—not to provide the contras with lethal aid, but to keep them well supplied with food, clothing and medicine. It is a compromise that will clearly bring neither peace nor a military victory.

In the meantime, the Sandinista reign, as Mr. Dickey points out, is becoming "ever more onerous." The state of emergency, which—as he notes—was introduced in March 1982 only after the first serious attacks by the contras and which was noticeably relaxed on the eve of the November 1984 elections—has recently been strengthened again. A draft law passed in 1983 has driven many young men into the arms of the contras. The conflict with the Roman Catholic hierarchy (much of which openly sympathizes with the cause of the contras) is escalating. Tens of thousands of independent farmers in northern Nicaragua have been forcibly relocated. The country's economy is tottering and popular dissatisfaction is growing. Whether the Sandinistas would have become more oppressive anyway is a moot—and unanswerable—question. Like any other species of determinism—Hegelianism, Marxism, or the once fashionable domino theory—the assumption that the Sandinistas are bound to become totalitarian rests on ideological dogma than on verifiable evidence. What is undisputable, however, is that the Reagan Administration fully understands that its policy contributes to the spiral of repression and violence. Mr. Dickey paraphrases the mood of official Washington: "In Nicaragua, if the C.I.A.'s operations meant the Sandinistas became more radical, more oppressive and more Soviet-allied, that was all to the good."

GUATEMALA: THE WINDS OF CHANGE

HON. GERRY E. STUDDS

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, 2 weeks ago, on January 14, the Central American nation of Guatemala celebrated the inauguration of Vinicio Cerezo as its first democratically elected civilian President in almost 30 years.

This event should be welcomed by all Americans, in the broadest sense of that term, for it represents a triumph both of the democratic process and of the personal courage of one man.

Political moderation, the safest course in much of the world, has frequently proven fatal in Guatemala. In recent decades, violence has robbed hundreds of thousands of people of their homes and tens of thousands of their lives. Social, economic, and political injustice led to the creation of a small armed opposition; which provoked, in turn, intense military terror; generating even greater desperation among Guatemala's poor majority; leading by the early 1980's to virtual civil war.

Guatemala's political extremes owe much to each other. They have provided the rationale for each other's violence; they respond to each other's rhetoric; and together they all but eliminated, geographically and politically, Guatemala's middle ground.

The election of Vinicio Cerezo is an indication that Guatemala can change, and demonstration, as well, that social and political reform can at least begin—even in Guatemala—through democratic means. Following several attempts on his life, Vinicio Cerezo had every excuse to leave Guatemala; he had every excuse to quit politics; he had every reason—out of desperation—to adopt violent means of inducing political change. Instead, Cerezo stayed; vowing with his party never to resort to violence, and never to be destroyed by violence.

Below is the English language text of the extraordinary address presented by President Cerezo on that most extraordinary of occasions, the inauguration in Guatemala of a civilian President. I urge all Members of Congress to read this speech, to consider what it has to say about past and present events, and to join with Cerezo in helping to make the democratic process in his country a success.

INAUGURAL SPEECH BY LICENCIADO MARCO VINICIO CEREZO AZREVALO, PRESIDENT OF THE REPUBLIC OF GUATEMALA

Fellow Guatemalans, the Honorable President of Congress, the Honorable Presidents of our fellow nations; Distinguished representatives of other allied countries; Distinguished representatives of International Organizations; Friends from around the world who visit us on this occasion. . . .

I address you today as a friend who is among his friends, as a brother among his brothers, as someone who shares the joy of those around him because today marks the day on which we Guatemalans have come home.

It is not Vinicio Cerezo who is being sworn into office as President of Guatemala. That is a technicality. The fundamental importance of this moment is that the citizenry of Guatemala as a whole is taking office and regaining control of its government.

We had been cast out of our own home as a result of painful and even absurd historical forces. Today is the occasion of our return to it.

For years we were forbidden free speech, and many of us were persecuted for speaking out. But now we have our freedom of speech again.

It became traditional for us to be told what to do and how to do it, and it never occurred to anyone in power to ask if we favored or opposed what the government decided—whether it was consistent with the culture of our community, our village, our region, our organizations, and compatible with our outlook and goals, our historic social traditions or our beliefs. Today we have recovered the right to be part of the political process.

Many of us came to feel like foreigners in our own nation. But now we can call this land ours once more.

Now that we have come home; now that we know that each group, each community, and each of us individually has recovered his rightful role in the political process; now that, as members of a democracy, we have again assumed our responsibility for taking part in shaping our national policies; now that each of us has become aware that he has recovered his right to influence events and be one more voice in a vibrant chorus of diverse opinions; to summarize, upon finding that each and every one of us is assuming, through the ballot box, a role in guiding the nation's future . . .

What do we find? What shape is our house in? In what condition is the land being returned to us? How is it reflected through the implacable yardstick of history? How should we tally—today, here and now—our sorrows and our hopes? What is the real face of our beloved Guatemala as it is being turned over once more to its people?

Undertaking together a thoughtful and sober analysis of the situation is essential, for an accurate understanding of our circumstances and our needs is a must, in order to develop and implement realistic solutions.

There are two aspects to the diagnosis we must develop. We must strive to understand Guatemala on the one hand with our heads and at the same time with our hearts.

Clearly we cannot dispense with a thorough technical analysis of what had been happening to us, what is happening to us now, and what could happen to us as a people, as a nation and as a region in the absence of drastic corrective steps.

Although the picture which the facts reveal is a painful one, making all Guatemalans understand exactly where we stand is important.

Our present crisis occurred in part because of general lack of information on the state of the country—a situation which, far from being coincidental, was the result of a carefully mounted campaign of deception and concealment.

There are other reasons we must share our information with all Guatemalans. One is that all of us have much to say to each other; there is much we have to learn from each other. And it is because of this that I say we also have to view and understand Guatemala with our hearts—because our only chance of overcoming this terrible crisis is by joining hands—by coming together with a spirit of optimism and a willingness to work, with mutual openness and respect, with a genuine desire to overcome the terrible legacy of distrust and fear burdening us now.

One thing is certain. No incoming head of state has ever had the country turned over to him in worse conditions.

With regard to the governmental process, we find that violence has become the accepted replacement for the traditional procedure of negotiation and compromise. Some Guatemalans, unable to resolve their differences through dialogue, mutual understanding and negotiated agreements, resorted to the absurd and primitive language of physical force and armed reprisal. On thousands of occasions our Guatemalan family found itself in mourning as a result of senseless and cruel violence coming from all sides of the political spectrum.

Some people's resource to violence was an individual decision to turn their backs on the legal process, for they argued that only in this way could they defend their ancestral privileges and prerogatives. Others took up violence because they could find no other way to vindicate themselves and defend their rights. Others who joined in the violence did so arguing that it was necessary for purposes of maintaining security and order. Finally there were some in powerful positions who resorted to it because in their situation the abuse of power was temptingly easy. Thus they swelled the ranks of the criminals who never respected the right of Guatemalans of all persuasions to live peacefully side by side.

For one reason or another, thousands of Guatemalan lives have been lost in this terrible vortex of fraticidal violence, and hundreds of thousands of us have suffered in one way or another the effects of this general climate of abuse.

At this time, I want to pay tribute to all Guatemalans who became victims of the government policy based on intolerance, desperation and abuse. Our national conscience as a democratic nation owes a debt to those thousands who sacrificed their lives.

At the same time, at this moment when we are united as Guatemalans and look to the future with hope, I also want to render homage to the living, to the long-suffering citizens of Guatemala who have had to bear the principal brunt of the economic and social crisis.

There is no need to go into the international aspects of our crisis in this context. Other experts from both Guatemala and other Latin American countries have written excellent descriptions of the economic injustice from which countries such as ours suffer, and of the devastation caused to our weak economies by the international recession.

Our internal situation, however, we must describe. While the international crisis has indeed, and for reasons we are all aware of, hurt our economy badly, it is also true that the actions of certain Guatemalans have added to the scope of the disaster.

Our economy has suffered from shortsighted decisions, lack of progress, the absence of coherent policies and a clear legal framework. There have been actions motivated by selfishness rather than an interest in bringing the greatest benefits to the largest number of people. At the same time, the administration of government has suffered from the incompetence of some of the men responsible for it.

But these have not been the only problems. Lack of understanding and intolerance have also been present in significant doses. Above all, the absence of morals and principals appears to have become all-pervasive, bringing about wide-spread corruption and encouraging the habitual solution of problems through the abuse of power.

The treasury being turned over to us is empty as a consequence of the mishandling of the nation's finances by previous administrations, and of corruption.

What is being turned over to us is an economic disaster without precedent. Economic activity has fallen, causing a serious balance of payments problem and a significant budget deficit. Savings and investment have decreased, and we have few resources at our disposal to redress these imbalances and be able to adopt a correct economic policy.

No funds are available for developing new government projects, and indeed our revenues are inadequate even for covering the routine expenses of the government.

Our external debt is four times greater than our annual revenue from exports. The commitments we have undertaken in connection with the payment of this debt are mortgaging the future of our children and grandchildren: already each Guatemalan citizen owes $320 as his share of the debt.

Too many of our people are jobless. At the same time, Guatemalans with a regular income have watched with helpless anguish as its purchasing power has gradually decreased. Even salary increases have not changed the fact that Guatemalans are able to buy less every day because the value of the currency has progressively dropped and the price of goods increased.

A cold and cruel statistical analysis indicates that, if we divide our national earnings by the number of Guatemalan citizens, each Guatemalan has an average daily income of one Quetzal, with which he must take care of his nutritional, health and housing needs, and pay for education and transportation.

But in real life the situation is even harsher than this picture indicates, for we know that a few Guatemalans have a lot, and many others have nothing.

We are eight million people. Five million of our brothers live in poverty. Even today many of our children die at birth, and only one of every three survivers does not qualify as being legally undernourished. The other two are condemned to poor diet which will not allow their brain to develop to its full potential or their having the minimum strength required to hold a job and go to school. They will be unable to avoid the stigma of being called dumb and lazy by other Guatemalans later in life. Similarly they will be criticized for the lack of hygenic practices to which they never had access, and the standards of behavior and education by which they will be measured were never within their reach.

My fellow Guatemalans, let's look around us to see how many of our sons and daughters have had the opportunity to go to school for the first time this year, and how many of these have been lucky enough to leave their homes with a notebook and a pencil in their hands.

And if the majority of our people live under at best precarious conditions, crueler still is the fact that their right to organize, to express their concerns and defend jointly their rights has been denied to them in recent times. Both the freedom of citizens to come together and the organization which represented them were banned, and many leaders and spokesmen of our people met death or were forced into exile.

Guatemalans: this is the picture of the country being handed back to us today. Such is the home to which we return and which we must now put in order. We have become administrators of bankruptcy and misery.

Our recent history has been characterized by suffering and sacrifice; from it true heroes have emerged. These must be recognized if we are to pay due tribute to the memory of our dead and particularly to the spirit of self-denial of the survivors of the crisis. The heroes I refer to are the Guatemalans who live in poverty, forgotten and, although physically alive, suffering the slow death which neglect inexhorably brings. I want to pay tribute, too, to the many citizens compelled by outside forces to leave their homes—some even to emigrate to foreign territories. Men and women who have suffered the inexpressible pain of seeing loved ones fall deserve special mention as well.

We feel the deepest respect and concern for those who have borne the brunt of the economic crisis, to those anonymous individuals who swell the statistics of hunger, malnutrition, ignorance and unemployment. To that vast majority of our brothers, in summary, who have suffered the bulk of the sacrifices so that the rest of us could live better, and who have had to bear so much suffering in this country—as much theirs as ours—of such abundance.

That is the debt which, now that we have become a democracy, we must pay back. We can best acknowledge their heroism and integrity by pledging to change conditions so that each Guatemalan may have a genuine opportunity to participate in a democratic decision-making process, and above all so that he may have a claim to a share of the benefits of that development.

Today, when we come back to our home, we grab the challenge of this new opportunity; we see our country with our heads and with our hearts; we study our country with scientific tools as well as with our conscience; we gain insight into our country with admiration and love, we thank our country and we imagine our country rising with enthusiasm and without bitterness; we dream our country with hope and courage, elbow to elbow, all of us together in the free flight of our democratic choice, wanting to build rather than to destroy; to contribute rather than to demand; to give each other a chance rather than to call to judgment; to allow us the opportunity to rectify more than to resort to revenge.

We come back to our home to refurbish it, to improve it, to set it straight, to make sure that even if we have too many things to do, we will do it together.

That even if the efforts awaiting for us are enormous, we will face them together.

That however much austerity and sacrifice the road before us may exact, we will walk the road together.

Then, even if we have almost nothing, the little that we have will be truly for everyone to share.

And that those of us who have been favored with the privileges and advantages of our uneven growth, will be willing to accept as fair, the load that is ours.

This is the kind of development that we must foster: a joint effort aimed not merely at increasing the availability of goods and services and not only at increasing production. All that is necessary and will be properly encouraged, but is not enough. That may very will be economic growth but it is not development.

We must foster a kind of development that will improve the living conditions of the people, making it possible to earn the resources to provide for themselves and bringing this about through projects which show respect for the values and aspirations of the community. A kind of development whose cornerstone will be man, not as an isolated individual but as human being.

Let's not make the mistake of thinking that building our country means only filling it with roads, buildings, factories and houses. Building our country should also include the search for our unity in our diversity, the rediscovery and knowledge of our rich ethnic heritage, the strengthening of our character, the improvement of our moral values and our cultural level. For us, putting our house in order must necessarily include winning a war against poverty, providing dignified employment to men and women, and feeding our children; it must also include wiping out intolerance and establishing clear and precise rules for the path we are to follow. To summarize, it should mean viewing development from a social point of view, and sustaining above all the principles of welfare of the whole and respect for human dignity.

WHICH IS OUR GREAT CHALLENGE?

Above all, we have a country to be built. The project before us is nothing less than the creation of a nation. And the magnitude and complexity of the problems, far from frightening us, stimulate us and increase our enthusiasm. Because there is much before us to be discovered, and much before us to do.

In this context, democracy means an effort of collective creativity. In this situation, all of us are actors and makers of this newness.

What can we count on? What resources are at our disposal as we go down this path? What are our chances for success? What is ahead of us?

There is a political project to undertake the developing of the country. A project that belongs to all and must count on all. There is a team of leaders selected by the people to represent them, but who will never be able to carry out the task alone. These leaders are taking office now to lead and supervise the work of all the people. We have selected among ourselves the men who must exercise the needed authority to lead the nation.

In this context, democracy means a collective exercise of responsibility. Because the authority of the government leaders does not carry over into areas outside the policies endorsed by the voters. Authority is not power; the two concepts are different. Power has to be subordinated to authority, because in the absence of responsible authority, it becomes tyranny. Precisely many of the men who have held this office before me appear not to have known or wanted to acknowledge the difference.

Because of the collective responsibility we must rightfully bear, and at the same time because of the deep crisis we are in, democracy, in this time and place, means a collective commitment to austerity. Only an effort by all sectors of the country, at all levels, with each trying to achieve much with as little as possible, and with all of us monitoring, as it is our civic responsibility to do, the use of public funds, will bring us prosperity.

This means as well an effort of generosity and self-sacrifice. But the burdens must be distributed among our citizens according to their means. We cannot ask those who have already given everything they had to increase their generosity in the future. Those of us who still have much and who have received much have the responsibility of sharing and contributing, even if the contribution be nothing more than complying honestly with what the law requires of us.

Democracy also implies an effort of collective justice, because of the serious unfairness of our national family. We will do everything possible to encourage that effort and create the proper legislative and administrative vehicles so that each Guatemalan will truly enjoy the protection of his constitutional rights, and justice will be accessible to all equally, rather than being determined by threats, bribes, or personal influence.

But today, more than ever, democracy should mean for us a deep effort of collective respect and affection because of the abandonment of so many for so long. Guatemala has a historic destiny before it, and a role to play both toward its own citizens and toward the community of nations. But the basis for such a role is achieving internal solidarity as a people, cherishing and respecting every community, every ethnic group, and respecting deeply the human rights of all our people.

Examining the situation from this perspective helps us in identifying and maximizing the use of resources which, in addition to those already mentioned, are available to us.

The first of these is the broad-based popular support which exists for our policies; there is an embryionic organizational structure which we must encourage; communications structures, some shattered, others uneven, underutilized the most, which must come to play a role in participation and national conciliation.

There is a productive structure which can generate wealth for the country if it faces the task with willingness, creativity and a sense of responsibility, and is given clear and constant game rules.

There is a structure of military power which backs our policies, supports the government and backs the Guatemalan people whom the leaders stand for.

Willingness to help Guatemala exists on the international level as well.

At this time we must extend our gratitude as a nation to the friendly governments and international organizations, but above all, to the ordinary citizens of those foreign lands who with their work, their productivity and their taxes have made available to us resources which have done so much good in Guatemala.

We warmly acknowledge these gestures of generosity and solidarity, and we pledge in return that we will simultaneously strive to strengthen our democratic experience with work and self-sacrifice, so that the contributions of other nations, some of which face serious economic problems themselves, will have been worthwhile.

Being fully aware that the home to which we return has been devastated, we are quite conscious of the role we must play in the international community, in a region suffering from the most serious international political crisis in its history, when together with our own internal problems, we find the conflicts of the superpowers which have chosen to play out the proxy war that they do not dare play in their own.

We must take an energetic stand in advocating our commitment to peace through participatory democracy. We should reaffirm with vehemence our desire to achieve internal solidarity and our intention to defend the ingrests of our nation and our region above all interests.

For that reason we reaffirm our complete support for Contadora and for any other sincere effort to bring peace to Central America.

But at the same time that we back these projects, and we are genuinely grateful for them, we are also conscious of our regional responsibilities, and we wish to make known that we announce our enthusiastic willingness, based on brotherly concerns, to serve as mediators, should events require it. At the same time, we reaffirm our desire to extend our hospitality to all Central American Heads of State. In our country you will always have a home. And we look forward to recieve you shortly in Esquipulas, a historic town whose sanctuary is a point of pilgrimage for Central Americans and which marks the convergence of the frontiers of three countries.

Our attitude and the suggestion we offer are nothing more than the direct reflection of our commitment to the democratic process internally, and of our dream of political unity existing someday in Central America.

That and only that has been our intention in suggesting the creation of a Central American Parliament where we can work jointly with our brothers in developing common rules for our peaceful coexistence and our socio-economic development.

Consistent with this, we also emphasize our willingness to give our strongest support to all organizations aimed at increasing Central American integration.

And while we are expressing our deep desire for peace and our gratitude for the solidarity of the international community, we would like to transmit a special message to the Caribbean, a region with which we hold so many ties. We hope that our ties of friendship will increase, and that the proper channels will be found so that our common desire to bring about peace and solidarity can foster greater understanding and permanent collaboration.

Fellow Guatemalans: Friends from around the world who are here sharing this momento with us.

As we take up the path of building a democracy, of creating a country—our nation—we need your help and your respect. In return, we offer you our generosity, and undertake a commitment to behave with dignity and modesty.

Our homecoming—a landmark in our history—makes me recall the story that the gods of our ancestors, after various unsuccessful attempts to find the best substance to put under the skin of man, CHOSE CORN.

I would like for us to see a reflection of ourselves in that vegetable—so simple and yet so marvelous. Each of its grains rests next to the other, and each row of kernels is linked to all the others in a web of interlocking nuggets which, as they develop on the plant, point to the sky. The individual kernels, linked by bonds as strong as granite, start near the ground but rise progressively, one over the other, aiming toward the heights and the light, and hoping to provide the nourishment out of the substances it extracts from the richness of the soil to the generous hands which nurtured its existence.

Guatemala—land of the men of corn, of poor hands but courageous hearts. We know that the greatness of civilizations, as one of our countrymen has said, is measured not only by its material output, but by the courage and stoicism with which its men face adversity.

Guatemalans: we have suffered so much. We have more than adequately prove that we can overcome adversity. Let us seize this opportunity to go forward together, united in a common effort like the corn which the gods put in our veins. Let us go down the road together, pausing only now and whenever it becomes necessary, to ask humbly and from the depth of our hearts, for the blessing of God our Lord.

MEDICARE BENEFICIARY PROTECTION ACT OF 1986

HON. EDWARD R. ROYBAL

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. ROYBAL. Mr. Speaker, today I rise to introduce the "Medicare Beneficiary Protection Act of 1986." This bill will continue the current waiver of liability presumption for home health agencies and skilled nursing facilities under the Medicare Program—a provision that the administration is proposing to eliminate.

The waiver of liability provision gives limited financial protection to health care providers who accept patients they have good reason to believe are eligible for Medicare coverage, but whose claims are subsequently denied.

The battle on the waiver issue began last February (1985). When draft regulations were issued by the Health Care Financing Administation [HCFA] revoking the waiver for nursing home and home health providers. HCFA's actions were strongly opposed by Members of the Congress and by provider groups on the grounds that what the administration says is a cut for providers will, in fact, be passed directly on to the beneficiary. Nursing home providers themselves admit that it is the beneficiary, not the provider, who will feel the sting if the waiver is dropped. Hence, the title of this bill, "The Medicare Beneficiary Protection Act."

How will beneficiaries be hurt if the waiver is dropped? In the case of most nursing home providers, for example, Medicare is a very small portion of their revenues. Removing the small amount of protection that the waiver of liability affords will only encourage these providers to pull out of the Medicare Program altogether. For both nursing home an home health care, putting providers at total financial risk will also result in more and more elderly patients being turned away whenever there is a question of Medicare coverage—even if they are rightfully eligible. This is not a provider issue. This is an issue of whether or not people who are in need and rightly eligible for continuing care services under Medicare will be able to get that care.

Both of these effects—providers dropping out of the Medicare Program and turning questionable beneficiaries away—will seriously limit the elderly's access to needed nursing home and home health care. It is this very type of care that the elderly need now more than ever with the move toward earlier discharges—the "sooner and sicker" phenomenon—under DRG's. The soundness of this argument was confirmed through testimony presented to the House Select Committee on Aging, which I chair, at its July hearing on long-term care cost containment.

In response to widespread opposition, then Health and Human Services [HHS] Secretary Margaret Heckler convened an internal task force to reconsider their proposal to drop the waiver. While we have yet to learn the results of task force deliberations, we understand that final regulations are currently being drafted that would eliminate the waiver provision—despite the sense of the Congress to the contrary.

The "Sense" of Congress is explicit in the language on the waiver issue agreed to by House and Senate conferees in the "Consolidated Omnibus Reconciliation Act of 1985" that has yet to be passed by the Congress. The conference agreement extends the 2.5-percent waiver of liability policy for home health agencies from enactment until 12 months after the consolidation of claims processing for home health agencies. Similarly, the agreement extends the 5-percent favorable presumption for skilled nursing facilities until 30 months after enactment.

The language in the bill I am introducing today is identical to that of the conference agreement. My intention in offering a separate bill should not be misread as doubt about whether the reconciliation bill will be passed this year. To the contrary, as expressed in my joint letter as chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging with FORTNEY H. (PETE STARK), chairman of the Ways and Means Health Subcommittee, to HHS Secretary Otis Bowen and OMB Director James Miller, there is every indication that a reconciliation bill will be passed this year with the waiver of liability provision intact.

Rather, the intent in introducing the "Medicare Beneficiary Protection Act of 1986" today is to send a clear and timely message to the administration that the Congress will not permit the medicare waiver of liability to be dropped. I urge the Congress to demonstrate its commitment to protecting beneficiaries from unreasonable cost containment measures by supporting this legislation. While we all agree that spiraling health care costs must be controlled, the Congress must remain true to its resolve that program cuts not be at the expense of the elderly's rightful access to quality care.

I ask, Mr. Speaker, that the "Medicare Beneficiary Protection Act of 1986" and the letters cosigned by the Honorable FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK and myself to Otis Bowen and James Miller be printed in the RECORD.

NICK CENAIKO: BIG-TIME PROMOTER AND SOFT TOUCH

HON. GERRY SIKORSKI

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. SIKORSKI. Mr. Speaker, this recent story by Ellen Foley in the Minneapolis Star and Tribune eloquently illustrates the many fine qualities of Anoka County Commissioner Nick Cenaiko, whose generosity and hard work are helping to transform the northern suburbs of the Twin Cities. America is a Nation of immigrants, and the sixth district of Minnesota has benefited, as has the rest of the country, from the energy and industry of men like Nick Cenaiko.

COON RAPIDS' CENAIKO: A BIG-TIME PROMOTER AND A SOFT TOUCH

(By Ellen Foley)

Anoka County Commissioner Nick Cenaiko has trouble sitting still.

He calls it nervous energy. Friends call it drive.

Whatever it is, it brought him to Anoka County 20 years ago. And he hopes that during the next 20 years it will help him transform the developing county into the best place to live and work in the metro area.

Cenaiko, 53, is a promoter. During the past 25 years he has sold vacuum cleaners door to door and worked concessions at county fairs. Now he produces big-city shows such as the Sportsmen's Boat, Camping and Vacation Show and the Minnesota Home Improvement and Patio Show, both held at the St. Paul Civic Center.

He is a wheeler-dealer, but friends say that everyone in Coon Rapids knows that if you're in trouble, Nick Cenaiko will give you a loan or find you a job.

"I know that he has given money to those who were down and out. He has given jobs to people when he had to look around for a job. When something needs to be done, he'll find a way to do it. And he doesn't brag about it," said Bob Lewis, Cenaiko's good friend and the mayor of Coon Rapids.

He is the son of Ukrainian immigrants who settled on a farm in Canada. Cenaiko immigrated to the United States in the 1950s with little more than a mortgaged car to his name.

He speaks with a thick accent and his conversations are accompanied by effusive gestures. His speech is punctuated with an infectious laugh and the phrase. "Put it 'dis way."

He puts a large, knotted hand over his mouth and then throws it in the air.

"Put it 'dis way. When someone says it can't be done, I like to prove them wrong."

Cenaiko started his own business in the 1960s. He and his wife traveled to 140 county fairs a year in the Midwest with a computerized handwriting analysis concession. Money was so tight that they often had to sleep in a pup tent, he said.

In 1964 he decided to try producing a show and secured the backing of a fraternal group in the area of Fargo, N.D. for his first sportsmen's show.

He netted only $300, but it launched his career in promotion.

This year he will produce eight shows in six states, including sportsmen's shows to Fargo, South Sioux City, Neb.; Sioux Falls, S.D.; Grand Forks, N.D.; Rock Island, Ill., and St. Paul.

He oversees five companies, Cenaiko Productions, which runs the sportsmen's shows; CEI Displays, a convention services firm: Nicholas C. Properties, a real estate firm: Chase Limousine Service, and Chase Securities Corp.

Cenaiko said that he has little to worry about financially these days, but that he will never forget the old days. The memory of a poor childhood and his days on the road keeps his purse open to those less fortunate.

"I think you have to have been broke," he said. "When you've lived in a tent because you couldn't afford a motel room, when you've eaten pork until you can't stand it because you can't afford beef, you understand.

Cenaiko, who became a citizen in 1980, said he likes hard work because he knows that in the United States he will have the opportunity to succeed even if he has failures along the way.

Carolyn Voss, a Coon Rapids City Council member, said many feel that Cenaiko's immigrant past motivated him to run for office.

"I think he's appreciative of the country (in which) he's made such a success of himself," she said. "He's paying it back."

Cenaiko's public involvement began in the early 1970s when he teamed with the late Henry Hammer on the Anoka County Fair Board to revamp the fair. Under their leadership it became one of the largest in the state.

Cenaiko said his County Board career began at the breakfast table in a Coon Rapids restaurant where friends meet several times a week to talk politics. A friendly argument about county politics ended with the statement, "Why don't you run for county commissioner?"

So Cenaiko did. He was elected in 1982 and reelected in 1984. Now he's vice chairman of the board.

"Nick loves people and people love him," said Al Kordiak, the chairman. "There's just no beating Nick Cenaiko."

Cenaiko said he'll never retire. In fact, the fast-talking, chain-smoking promoter is looking for new frontiers. He said that there may be a movie in his future and that he's learning the secrets of videotape production.

He said his restlessness won't move him away from Coon Rapids. How could he leave the area that he considers to be the next boom town of the metro area?

"It's starting to come right now!" he said, waving his hands around his head.

Residents of the fast-growing southern suburbs might not agree. But if Anoka County isn't the metro areas's next hot spot, it won't be because Cenaiko didn't try.

TEXAS WILL MISS SAM WHITTEN

HON. JOHN BRYANT

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. BRYANT. Mr. Speaker, just a few days ago—early in the Lone Star State's sesquicentennial year—a student of Texas, its literature, its people, and its politics in the broadest and best sense died.

Sam Whitten, a remarkable Texan, is gone and will be sorely missed not only by his family, but also by all those who discovered through him the wonder of books and whose lives he touched in other ways.

He read, he thought, he taught, he loved and collected books. He and his wife Virginia and their children for many years hosted "First Friday," lively monthly gatherings of some of Texas' most interesting thinkers and doers.

Sam Whitten is eloquently and fondly remembered in a tribute by Dallas Times Herald columnist Molly Ivins that I would like to share with my colleagues.

WHITTEN WOULD HAVE LOVED PFORZHEIMER COLLECTION

(By Molly Ivins)

AUSTIN.—Two things happened Tuesday involving books and book people.

The University of Texas announced its acquisition of a stunning collection of early English literature. The Pforzheimer Collection, which is a staggering group of rare books and manuscripts, was acquired for the university by H. Ross Perot for $15 million. The school now will raise the money to repay Perot, who will charge no interest. It was one of those deals where the collection came on the market and the university did not have the cash, so Perot stepped in and bought it for UT on a loan basis.

We are talking about the earliest books ever printed in English, first editions of Chaucer, Spenser, Shakespeare, Jonson, Bacon, Donne, Milton, Bunyan, Izaak Walton, Hobbes, Locke. There are eight Caxtons in the collection—William Caxton having been the first English printer—as well as a Coverdale Bible, the first complete English Bible. There are manuscript letters from Donne and others. Perot correctly described the collection as "top of the tree."

The university held a press conference to announce this coup, and I wish you could have been there. Among the scholars and intellectuals expressing their pleasure over this landmark bibliographical event were Gov. Mark White, the pride of Baylor U., and House Speaker Gibson D. Lewis, a man who has perpetrated innumerable atrocities upon the English language.

I must confess that the prospect of Lewis commenting on this motherlode of English literature filled me with unholy glee, but I am proud to report that, as the speaker himself would put it, he extinguished himself just fine. We were once more grateful for Bill Hobby's sense of brevity: The man had the taste to acquit himself gracefully in a single sentence. Hobby is known to read—for pleasure. This is a habit shared by about .0013 percent of all other Texas politicians.

Perot is rather endearing on these occasions. He described how he first had been called in the course of a busy day and told that the Pforzheimer Collection was for sale: He asked how much it cost, said, "It's too much," and hung up. Later that day, he reports, he thought he should find out what was in the collection. He was persuaded to buy it when Decherd Turner, the director of the Humanities Research Center, told Perot that he would consider it "the epitome of my career just to be allowed to look at the Pforzheimer Collection."

The other thing that happened Tuesday was that Sam Whitten died. He was by title associate professor in the Graduate School of Library and Information Science at UT, but to my way of thinking, Sam Whitten was just about the perfect Texas bookman. He was not only a librarian and teacher of librarians but a true bibliophile, a book lover. He collected books—in a way, just like Ross Perot.

Whitten's collection of Texana is not exhaustive, but it is notable. he collected fiction with a Texas setting and had some real jewels—for example, books about Texas by Brits who never had been here and caused their Texans to flee across the prairie wearing plimsolls. Whitten, unlike some collectors, had read all the books in his collection. He spent his savings—what others would have put into a retirement home—on his own library, a small converted garage in the backyard where he had installed a book preservation system with the correct temperature controls and all.

I think Whitten's two most distinguishing characteristics were his extraordinary intelligence and his cussedness. He was a crotchety man and little inclined to put up with much of the world's nonsense. For example, he never became a full professor because he refused to get a Ph.D. In his opinion, a Ph.D. in library science would have been a waste of time and he was not responsible for the stupid rules for advancement others made up.

Whitten became a book lover by way of a poor background in Bogata, Texas (that's another one you neo-natives need to learn to pronounce), a couple of gifted English teachers and the U.S. Navy. This route seems to yield a crustier variety of book lover than normally comes from a middle-class home and Ivy League Schools. The only books in the Whitten home in Bogata were an old set of the Book of Knowledge, and he could still tell you stuff from it 50 years later.

He remembered the name of every English teacher who ever read aloud to his class and what she read. So here, once more, is a salute to all the Enid Bagwells in all the improbable towns in this state, still trying to read Keats to a class filled with know-nothing kids.

The Navy did its share in World War II by boring a 17-year-old Whitten into the embrace of the Modern Library, then $1.25 for a hardback book of just about everything important that ever has been written. He read them all. It denigrates no one to suggest that Whitten believed the Modern Library was a more significant contribution to learning than the Pforzheimer Collection. It makes me happy to think of all the librarians around this state trained by Sam Whitten—don't be surprised if one up and tells you some time to quit wasting your time on the trash you are about to check out and gives you a book you really will love.

I got to thinking about this wonderful collection of books at UT and about Whitten's life—all those books and all those words. In the end, there was one word. Sam Whitten was blessed with a wonderful family, and they all hung around during his last illness. He woke up after several days in a coma: He could not talk because the doctors had all these tubes down his throat, but he wanted to communicate. He gestured for paper and pencil, and the kids rushed to get them.

He tried to write, but he was so weak all that came out was little chicken scratches. So his son Jeff stayed up that night and made a big alphabet chart so that Sam could pick out letters. First thing he asked the next day was, "Who is this doctor?" They "talked" with him some through the chart, but then he got weaker and tired, and finally his hand shook as he picked out a last word. He found the L and then the O. And then the V and then the E.

A CONCERNED FARMER'S SUGGESTIONS

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, on December 20, 1985, the House Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee's Subcommittee on General Oversight and Investigations, which I chair, convened in my hometown of Mayfield, KY, to hear testimony relative to the farm credit crisis and the problems of farmers.

Our subcommittee heard from nearly 40 witnesses including farmers, bankers, government officials, and representatives from the Farm Credit System. However, one of the highlights of our hearing was the impromptu testimony of Laura Anderson of Route 2, Mayfield. Laura and her husband Tom are both 1971 graduates from the University of Kentucky College of Engineering. This outstanding couple has chosen farming as a livelihood, yet it continues to be necessary for Laura to work in management for South Central Bell in order to complement their farming income.

Laura recently sent me a letter which further details her thoughts about possible solutions to the problems facing the agricultural sector.

I encourage my colleagues to read and consider Laura Anderson's concerns and suggestions. Her excellent letter follows:

MAYFIELD, KY.
December 30, 1985.

Hon. CARROLL HUBBARD,
Rayburn House Office Building,
Washington, DC.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN: We certainly appreciate your public hearing in Mayfield. It is difficult to testify at such a hearing without emotion. I do not know if you are aware of at least one farm debt related suicide locally. In spring, 1985, Bobby Knight, a farmer in north Graves County, shot himself. This fall his home, farm and machinery were sold at auction.

I spoke at the hearing, totally unprepared, but emotionally driven to add to the record. I spoke of the tools we use to aid our marketing decisions. Enclosed is some of the information my husband and I gather and study throughout the year. You will note one thought about the farm bill stands out clearly in all the reports. The market prices for the 1986 new crop will be lower than the current prices, worsening our situation. Like other American businessmen we want to raise our crops and sell our products in an open market. We do not want government subsidies, deficiency payments or loan programs.

We have all thought about solutions to the farm crisis. I offer three solutions to the three most troublesome areas.

1. INCREASED EXPORTS

We will have a very difficult time recovering from Carter's grain embargo. Argentina, Brazil, and other countries had idle land cleared and planted with crops by entrepreneurs from all over the world. A real surplus of grain exists. Why don't we send foreign aid in food rather than dollars? The Federal Government could buy the food on an open market. Our dollars, (that we don't have?) are used for weapons, and more likely than not fall into the hands of a few for their own personal use.

2. LOWERED INTEREST RATES

The banks and savings and loans across the country seemed to have made great profits in the past few years. New elaborate buildings, consolidation, buy outs, advertising all point to profitable times. Please note the enclosed AP news article. Farmers have checkoffs to support the American Soybean Association and also participate in holding funds for insurance against failure of grain elevators. Why can't the banks and savings and loans participate in a checkoff plan whereby a percentage (one-fourth, 1 percent) of profits establishes a fund for the PCA's and Federal Land Banks to draw upon for farm loans. The PCA's and FLB's could borrow money from this fund at a low interest rate and in return provide a low interest rate to the farm crop producers. Within time the banks would see loans repaid and even farmer savings accounts!

3. RESPECTABLE MARKETING SYSTEM

The management of the Chicago Board of Trade is the main culprit here. Most of the grain bought and sold is by people, corporations who never put out a crop, never take delivery or know much about the agribusiness. They sell when the market makes them a profit and buy when grain is cheap, driving prices lower. These moneychangers manipulate the market on their terms while the farmer must plant in the spring and harvest in the fall. Can we not restrict the manipulation of the market by registering farm producers and legitimate grain buyers as the participants in this game? The crop producers are easily identifiable through ASCS, PCA, FLB. The grain buyers must have taken delivery of grain either a specified number of times or a percentage of the grain they bought.

My answers are simplistic, I know. However, often we justify not trying by saying it can't be done. While the new farm bill sends a glimmer of light from Washington, it is not the answer. For one who wants to till the soil, the prospect of setting aside good productive land and accepting money for doing nothing is unacceptable. No, I don't want to spend federal tax dollars to support the farmer.

Again, thank you for your effort. I do hope Congress continues to look for ways to save the American farmer. Allowing farmers to retain investment credit will help!

Yours truly,

LAURA ANDERSON.

DISMANTLING THE MILITARY-CONGRESSIONAL COMPLEX: THE FIRST LEGISLATIVE STEPS

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, we are all familiar with the wry saying: "Everybody complains about the weather but nobody does anything about it." The same might be said for military reform. Many Senators and Congressmen, including myself, have been working hard in this area for several years now, but I still have a nagging sense that we have failed to get to the root causes of many of our military difficulties.

I am today introducing two bills which, in my view, represent the first steps toward the eventual dismantlement of what has been called the "military-congressional complex"; that is, the collection of interconnected executive branch and congressional national security entities which, to a large extent, dictates how America will be defended. The following is an overview of the problems caused by the "complex" and an explanation of how my legislation would attack the problem.

Over the last two decades, we have witnessed a well-intentioned series of efforts to reform our military apparatus and increase its combat effectiveness and peacetime efficiency. Some of these reforms have succeeded; others have not. The cumulative result, however, has been the creation of a huge bureaucracy that is slow, cumbersome, inefficient, and frequently unaccountable to political control. In the realm of defense procurement, the disturbing examples of overpriced items result not from perturbations in the procurement system, but, paradoxically, from the system functioning according to plan. When simple procurement decisions are made by dozens of Government officials in different agencies, we should not be surprised when long delays and exorbitant costs are the common result.

The bureaucratic proliferation has occurred on both sides of the Potomac. For its part, the Congress has vastly expanded its Pentagon oversight activities since shortly after the Vietnam war. Congressional military oversight panels have ballooned from four committees and their subcommittees in 1975 to more than 40 such bodies today. These entities and the relevant personal staffs conduct over 400 hearings, request over 400 reports, and generate more than 120,000 letters and 600,000 phone calls to the Pentagon in a typical year.

While all this oversight activity is not a priori undesirable, we need to understand that this level of involvement in defense matters contributes to difficulties in military procurement and deployment decisions. In the case of procurement, Congress frequently alters weapons systems production rates rather than terminating the programs outright. For example, Tomahawk cruise missile production rates dropped from 1,082 to 251 units in 1 year. As any businessman in your district will tell you, this can lead to uneconomical production rates and unnecessary costs for even relatively simple weapons systems. In the force deployment area, Congress recently attempted to block the strategic homeporting naval fleet dispersal plans, largely out of parochial concern for the present naval port areas.

In addition to the sheer volume of congressional military oversight, there is the inordinate amount of time required to complete these activities. Since the consideration of the fiscal year 1947 defense budget, the Congress has managed on only two occasions to have its Defense Appropriation bill on the President's desk prior to the beginning of the new fiscal year. Since 1977, defense Appropriations bills have been an average of 45 days late and, more often than not, we must resort to continuing resolutions to keep the Defense Department running. There is no reason for all matters military to be considered and debated more than once in a given fiscal year, particularly when congressional history shows that the Appropriations Committees were only created to hold the line on spending and were not intended to revisit every issue that had already been settled by the authorizing committees. Duplication of this kind increases production costs and times, clogs up the funding mechanism in the Congress, and impedes rapid decisionmaking which is necessary for national security.

In the Defense Department, the root causes of many of our procurement problems are overlooked, in favor of Band-Aid solutions which are simple, appealing, and ineffective. In my view, many of these causes are structural. The Congress, with the passage of the 1958 Defense Reorganization Act, permitted the Secretary of Defense to create centralized Defense agencies to handle many requirements which appeared to be common to all the military Services. This approach to defense management was very much in vogue in the 1960's under former Secretary of Defense Robert McNamara. But the Defense agencies now have grown to at least 11 in number, and they employ almost 135,000 servicemen and approximately 85,000 civil servants. Unfortunately, because they are headed by senior civil servants or military officers, these agencies are not directly accountable to the politically appointed, congressionally confirmed service Secretaries and the Secretary of Defense.

The largest such agency, the Defense Logistics Agency, employs 50,000 people and was responsible for the $700 toilet seat, the $110 diodes, and the $200 ejector seat straps. The Defense Contract Audit Agency, the central audit body, generally takes anywhere from 60 to 100 days to complete more than 40 percent of its audits of weapons systems and other military procurement contracts.

Perhaps most disturbing is the fact that both Agencies were created to handle functions performed by the military services, and these functions are still being performed by the services. In my view, it would be preferable for the politically accountable service Secretaries to be responsible for all the procurement actions and contract audits for their departments. Under such an arrangement, heads would roll as punishment for outrageous defense expenditures; right now, it is virtually unheard of for a senior civil servant or military officer to take the heat for errors of this kind.

I have only illuminated a small number of congressional and Defense Department problems which require attention, but we need to start now and take bold steps to enact structural reforms on both sides of the Potomac. Accordingly, one of my bills would merge the House defense authorization and appropriations responsibilities into the House Armed Services Committee and restrict House defense oversight functions to the Armed Services Committee and the Budget Committee. This action would greatly reduce the time and effort required to draft and pass defense funding legislation in the Congress, and it would reduce by about seven the number of committees and subcommittees exercising oversight responsibilities for the Defense Department. The net result would be more efficient legislative activity and less congressional micromanagement of the Pentagon.

My second bill would eliminate the Defense Logistics Agency and the Defense Contract Audit Agency and return their functions to the military services, from which they originated. As a practical matter, civil service "bumping" privileges will permit many of the DLA and DCAA personnel to burrow into other DOD offices, but we still will have achieved the dismantlement of two centralized bureaucracies and the elimination of a large number of high salary civil service billets. Most importantly, we will have improved the accountability and efficiency of the defense procurement bureaucracy, and provided insurance against future procurement scandals.

I recognize that these bills are strong medicine. But we face grave challenges from the enormous budget deficit and a centrally planned Soviet military machine which is able to turn out large numbers of advanced weapons systems like sausages. I hope to be able to do more in this area in the months ahead, but for how we should take these first steps toward creating a defense establishment free of the bureaucratic tangles which have called our most important military capabilities into question.

TELEPHONE DEREGULATION: CAUSES AND CONSEQUENCES

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to insert my Washington Report for Wednesday, January 29, 1986 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

TELEPHONE DEREGULATION: CAUSES AND CONSEQUENCES

It has been two years since a court decision ended American Telephone and Telegraph's (AT&T) eroding monopoly on long-distance telephone service. The decision, and the economic forces behind it, began a new era in telecommunications. Although economists and consumers are still unsure if divesting AT&T of its local companies was wise, the breakup brought about changes that are here to stay. For consumers, owning a phone is a more complicated and expensive proposition.

Complexity: Each part of telephone service is now a separate industry. Long distance service is supplied by competing companies, equipment by competing manufacturers. Local service remains a regulated utility. Once handled by one bill, these services now require up to three separate bills, or three parts of the same bill.

Long distance: AT&T is still preeminent in long distance. Until recently, competitors like GTE Sprint and MCI had to make do with inferior hookups to local customers while AT&T enjoyed clear connections. As more areas offer equal access to all long distance companies, consumers will be able to choose their long distance carrier. Users can then dial long distance calls direct, without extra numbers and with any type of phone, no matter which carrier is used.

Local service: The court divided AT&T's 22 local operating companies among seven regional companies. These companies began with no product other than a dial tone. Their main business is local service, beginning at the wall outlet and ending where long distance begins.

Equipment: The biggest savings for consumers is in equipment. Though consumers are now responsible for repairs on their phones, buying rather than renting a phone is one way they can save money in the new telephone market.

Cost: Rates are also changing. Before the breakup, part of the price of long distance calls helped pay for local service, making it affordable to more families. With long distance separate from local service, the price of each must begin to match its cost. Increased competition brought long-distance rates down, but for most people the drop has not been enough to offset increased local rates. Phone companies and state regulators are experimenting with new billing schemes that trade cuts in service for cost savings. "Measured service", one such plan, charges by frequency and length of calls, time of day, and distance covered. For example, Continental Telephone has asked the Public Service Commission to permit measured service in Corydon and Huntingburg.

There are also new charges for two services that were once free: access to long distance and operator assistance. "Access fees" are not really a cost of access to long distance. Their purpose is to bring the price of local service up to equal its cost. The Federal Communications Commission (FCC), a government regulator, added these fees to local rates nationwide. People who use no long distance service and do not need access still have to pay for it.

Another new fee is for operator assistance. When local companies knew that a directory call usually accompanied a money-making long-distance call, they gladly footed the bill. With long distance and local service separate, the cost falls to the consumer. In most areas two directory calls are free, with a small charge for each subsequent call.

Many in Congress fear that high costs may push people off the telephone system. Of special concern are the disabled, the elderly, and others who rely on the telephone for companionship and help in emergencies. One proposal in Congress would require state agencies to set an adjusted "lifeline" rate for low-income persons.

Outlook: Current trends give a glimpse of the future telephone industry. One trend is the decline in the number of long distance companies. Once filled with small companies, the long distance market is becoming a place where only the large survive. The merger of U.S. Telecom and GTE Sprint put the lion's share of the market in the hands of just three companies; GTE, MCI, and AT&T.

Another trend is diversification. Though local service is still 95 percent of their trade, the seven regional companies are quickly diversifying. Ameritech, the parent company of Indiana Bell, has invested in computers, radio telephones, Tailand's yellow pages, and others. Some state regulators worry that an investment failure could mean higher rates. Though no action is being considered, state regulators will keep a close eye on local telephone companies as they diversify.

Perhaps the most ominous trend is "bypass." Large companies are increasingly setting up their own telephone networks, costing local companies a large share of their most profitable business. A 1984 study showed that if Indiana Bell's top 40 customers bypassed local systems, $33 million would be lost, meaning higher rates for remaining customers. Local companies are asking regulators for a freer hand to compete with bypassers by offering cheaper rates to large business users, but this problem is likely to persist.

U.S. equipment makers will face competition from foreign manufactures. Divestiture opened the telephone equipment market and allowed the entry of foreign phones and equipment. Other countries, however, have closed telecommunications markets. U.S. firms have shown they can compete when allowed to: a U.S. company will supply the phone system for the 1988 Seoul Olympics.

My judgment is that govenment will have less say in the management of the telephone industry. Congress has taken few steps to change the result of the court's decision. The FCC will probably play a less important role in future actions than state public service commissions. Under present circumstances, my chief concern is to maintain "universal service", the principle of providing basic affordable telephone service to everyone. In the shuffle of changing technologies, this founding principle should not be lost.

CHICAGO MAYOR HAROLD WASHINGTON AND GRAMM-RUDMAN

HON. CHARLES A. HAYES

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, January 22, city of Chicago Mayor Harold Washington appeared as a witness before the House Budget Committee. At that time Mayor Washington made two predictions. The first was of a humorous nature and concerned sports; he predicted that the city of Chicago would be home of the soon-to-be-crowned Super Bowl champions, those Monsters of the Midway, the Chicago Bears. His second prediction was as dire as the first was pleasant; he spoke regarding the budget-cutting methods of the Federal Government on the city of Chicago. He said, "The President's recommendations and Gramm-Rudman would tear the guts out of our local government." He lists many services and programs which would have to be eliminated due to budget reductions.

The great cities of our Nation have contributed—and continue to contribute—much to the history, culture, vitality, and tax revenues of our Nation. We must deal with the Federal deficit, but we must deal with it in a way that is equitable, fair, and ensures the survival of our Nation's cities. I would like to enter the entire text of the mayor's remarks into the record. If his second prophecy is as accurate as his first, and many of us expect that it will be, perhaps we should reconsider Gramm-Rudman, and instead institute deficit-reduction methods that are as equitable as they are meaningful.

The statement follows:

MAYOR HAROLD WASHINGTON'S STATEMENT BEFORE HOUSE BUDGET COMMITTEE—JANUARY 22, 1986

Distinguished Congressman: The City of Chicago budget office has calculated that Chicago stands to lose as much as $155 million in federal funding in 1986, as a result of specific program cuts and the across-the-board cutbacks mandated by Gramm-Rudman.

Such a loss, amounting to nearly 8 percent of the city's budget, would be devastating, particularly when combined with cutbacks we have undergone in the past several years.

And the impact would be far larger than appear by numbers alone. What would have to be eliminated first is the creative, life-giving, forward-looking piece of city government—the programs that cost relatively little and train our youth, feed our hungry, build low-income housing for our underemployed, and encourage our teenage mothers to feed their babies properly.

We are talking about our programs that take relatively small amounts of dollars and leverage them with private dollars, and with community sweat and commitment.

We are talking about the $2.6 million spent on our new anti-gang program in 1985—dollars that funded 81 community-based non-profit agencies to run youth programs with volunteer help from the community. In 1985 this anti-gang program served over 12,000 youth and helped us reduce gang-related murders by 20%.

We can only estimate what the much larger Gramm-Rudman cuts expected in 1987 and further would do to the fabric of city life.

The President's recommendations and Gramm-Rudman would tear the guts out of local government. In Chicago, we would be left with essential services only: Police, Fire, Sanitation, Health and bare social services. Our development agencies—Housing, Economic Development and Planning—would face elimination.

The elimination of Revenue Sharing alone, which provided us $67 million last year, would mean that a dozen city departments would lose about one-third of their funding—severely affecting health care, garbage pick-up, emergency services, services to the elderly, and consumer programs.

The one-third cut of $37 million we anticipate in the Community Development Block Grant program this year will force cuts in literally dozens of programs, including elimination of a major neighborhood health center, the end to our home-delivered meal program for seniors, cuts in day care centers, food packages, and so on.

We estimate that $100 million in private sector funds and as many as 7,400 jobs will be lost with the elimination of UDAG.

Elimination of $24 million in housing funds will devastate our creative housing programs, which are beginning to turn around the decline of Chicago's older housing stock. Elimination of the Rental Rehab program alone will result in the loss of $20 million in private funding and a loss of 550 rehabilitated housing units.

The list goes on and on. You know the general framework. Between 1981 and 1986, the Community Development Block Grant budget has dropped 20 percent, while the defense budget has more than doubled. This does not constitute equity to me.

Less than 10 percent of the federal budget goes to programs assisting low-income people. Yet one-third of the budget cuts come from prorams that serve these people. That also is not equity.

Another way to underscore the inequities in federal policy is to consider this startling comparison: in 1977, for every dollar that was committed to defense, twenty-six cents was committed to low-income housing; in 1980, that housing figure dropped to 19 cents; in 1984, it was one and one-half cents. In the President's FY '86 budget, the President's latest proposal, it was less than one cent.

We all recognize the need for a balanced federal budget—but it must not be balanced on the backs of our urban centers.

In Chicago we have worked hard over the past two and a half years to eliminate our city's budget deficit. We have cut our workforce by one-seventh, or 6,500 employees. We have done our utmost to cut waste and improve services. But we cannot cut much further without damaging the quality of life in Chicago.

The federal funding cuts would not only be hard on Chicago. They would also be unfair.

Already Illinois ranks 48th among states in the amount of money returned to this area from tax dollars sent to Washington.

The great, older cities of America have contributed much to its history and its culture, as well as in federal tax dollars. But the cities cannot continue to give and give and continue to get back less and less in return.

What is at stake here is not just federal programs, but the future of our cities. It is imperative that those of us who cherish our cities, and value the people that live within them, do everything we can to ensure the survival of our great urban centers.

ANDREI SAKHAROV

HON. THOMAS A. DASCHLE

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, January 21, 1986

Mr. DASCHLE. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues in commemorating the sixth anniversary of the exile of Dr. Andrei Sakharov. I thank the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. FRANK, for calling attention, once again, to the tragic situation that continues to find Dr. Sakharov and Dr. Yelena Bonner banished to the isolated city of Gorky. This unjust treatment of Dr. Sakharov and Dr. Bonner violates the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the Helsinki Final Act, the International Covenant on Civil and Political Rights, and other Soviet-endorsed international agreements.

Before their exile, Andrei Sakharov and Yelena Bonner were clear voices in the struggle for global peace and human rights. Now, in exile, they have been silenced through physical isolation, but they continue to lead the struggle, for the world knows and respects their thoughts, their efforts, and their spirit. Their rights have clearly been violated, and as we must speak out wherever there is injustice, we must call upon the Soviet Union to end its wrongful treatment of Dr. Sakharov and Dr. Bonner.

While we can be pleased and encouraged by the Soviet extension of a temporary visa to Dr. Bonner for medical reasons, it would be naive of us to view this gesture as the long-awaited promise of improved human rights in the Soviet Union. As soon as Dr. Bonner's medical treatment is over, she will return to exile in Gorky. She will return to the restricted, oppressive life common to so many independent thinkers, Jews, Baptists, and others who have been irrationally and inhumanely persecuted by the Soviet Government.

I am pleased to cosponsor and lend my full support to House Concurrent Resolution 269, which specifically calls upon the Soviet Union to allow Dr. Sakharov and Dr. Bonner to exercise their rights of movement and expression. As Dr. Sakharov begins his 6th year in exile, it is appropriate for us to express our support for these courageous individuals. It is also fitting that we take this opportunity to show our support for all Soviet citizens suffering political, intellectual, and religious persecution.

H.R. 3521 HARMFUL TO COPYRIGHT

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to my colleagues' attention the harmful impact on our copyright system of legislation which has recently been introduced regarding music and syndicated television programs. This bill, H.R. 3521, would seriously harm creators of music, program producers, and those who look to the royalty system for their livelihood. The following article from the December 28, 1985, issue of TV Guide provides excellent arguments in opposition to the bill.

SONGWRITERS HEAR A SOUR NOTE FROM TV

(By Walter H. Annenberg)

The men and women who write the music that moves and inspires us, bringing so much joy to our lives, deserve our admiration and respect. That is why we deplore current efforts to deny these gifted people the fruits of their labor.

Broadcasters seem determined to end the present agreements that cover the way they pay for the music that is an essential element in all television programs. The courts have ruled these agreements are enforceable despite the fact that broadcasters have tried and failed, in repeated lengthy and expensive court procedures, to change the method and amount of payment. Now they have turned to Congress. A bill they have caused to be introduced would upset the carefully negotiated system of payments for music rights that has been working smoothly for the past 40 years. This bill, which bears the names of Rep. Frederick C. Boucher (D-Va.) and Rep. Henry J. Hyde (R-Ill.), could reduce payments to songwriters for use of their music on television to a pittance. And if past experience is any criterion, we can now expect the full force of the powerful broadcasting lobby to be brought to bear on members of Congress to persuade them to pass the bill and help the television stations at the expense of songwriters and program producers.

The present arrangement provides for a "blanket" performance-license fee to be paid by each station for access to virtually all copyrighted music. this music performance fee amounts to something less than one per cent of a station's gross revenue. Aside from the stations, producers of programs pay a one-time "synchronization" fee for recording the music, and the three commercial networks pay a blanket yearly fee that is negotiated. These blanket fees are turned over to the performance-rights organizations that represent nearly all songwriters and publishers: ASCAP (American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers) and BMI (Broadcast Music Inc.). The organizations also collect all performance royalties for American music played throughout the world and distribute the money to songwriters and their publishers according to the number of times their music was performed.

Stations that do not wish to pay blanket license fees have a number of alternatives available to them:

1. A station can obtain "per program" licenses from ASCAP or BMI, paying a music royalty for each individual broadcast.

2. The agreements ASCAP and BMI have with their membes are nonexclusive, leaving stations free to negotiate license fees directly with the composers and publishers instead of with their performance-rights organizations.

3. Since some songwriters do not belong to ASCAP or BMI, the stations can buy rights directly from these composers.

4. Broadcasters can require producers of the programs they broadcast to pay the performance-rights fees, thereby relieving stations of that responsibility. The Boucher-Hyde bill makes this mandatory for their syndicated programs.

While stations obviously would prefer having producers assume performance-license fee payments, the producers have so far rejected that option and the stations have paid the blanket fee. This is certainly the most cost-efficient and easily administered system, and it permits the stations to broadcast just about any music they choose without keeping records.

It has proved to be a fair and inexpensive way to compensate the artists who write the music that is so vital to television and adds so much to its audience appeal. The courts have ruled that the blanket license is legal. The amount of the blanket fee, incidentally, has been negotiated downward from 2.5 per cent of a station's revenue in 1949 to the present less than one per cent.

Under the Boucher-Hyde bill the stations would not be required to pay performance-license fees for the music in the syndicated programs and commercials they buy and that payment would have to be assumed by the producers of programs. As for the background music in their news shows and local originations, the stations would negotiate with the composers and publishers to arrive at a license fee. Certainly administering such a system would be a nightmare. It also would be unfair to producers of syndicated shows, who are among the biggest risk-takers in the television business and can hardly stand the additional burden of paying for performance rights on programs that might or might not succeed. They feel they should continue paying their relatively small one-time "synchronization" fees because they are not "performing" the mustic, merely "recording" it.

What the stations were unable to win via the courts, they now seek to win from Congress with a bill that could be disastrous for the songwriters.

In the opinion of Hal David, president of ASCAP (and, ironically, the lyricist who wrote "What the World Needs Now is Love, Sweet Love"): "Passage of the bill would end a basic right that authors and composers have always had—the right to have continuous payment for continuous use of our music. The producers would simply buy the music on a one-time basis." Adds David: "That would be like buying a new car, filling it with gasoline and never having to buy gas again."

Last year ASCAP distributed some $169 million and BMI about $115 million to their songwriters and composers. According to ASCAP, the royalties under the proposed legislation would be considerably lower. Actually, they could be negligible since the producers now pay their one-time recording fee before the true value of the music is established. The producers of M*A*S*H for example, paid the standard one-time recording fee for the music in each episode. The value of M*A*S*H skyrocketed when the show went into syndication, but the required one-time fee had been paid. If the stations had not been responsible for performance-rights fees—and under the Boucher-Hyde bill they would not have been—the songwriters would have been denied the increased royalties enjoyed by nearly everyone else connected with the show.

It is evident that the proposed unwarranted and unfair legislation would harm those who write the music heard on television and the producers who invest in programs in the hope that they will succeed. It would be unconscionable for the Congress to go along with this attempt to exploit the talents of some of the most creative members of our society.

THE "CHALLENGER" TRAGEDY

HON. DAVID DREIER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, words fail us at times like these as we contemplate the tragic and unexpected loss of life from the Challenger mishap. We have come to take for granted the magic of the American Space Program—moments like these make us realize our humanity.

After our shock subsides, we in Congress will no doubt do some soul-searching about the direction and purpose of the Space Program. Indeed, our first responsibility to the American people is to see that this awful accident is thoroughly explained and a repeat avoided.

What took place 10 miles above the Earth yesterday may never be fully explained, and it may be some time before we are clear on how this accident will affect our ongoing exploration of space. However, I am hopeful that our mission to explore our universe will not be a permanent victim.

Most of us admittedly lack the technical knowledge to solve problems like these as blithely as we offer our insight into more earthly matters. We must not lack the vision, however, that has compelled us since the days of sputnik to reach out to space.

As we grieve for those lost yesterday, let us pause for a moment to consider the safety record of the Space Program in general and the Shuttle Program in particular. Before today, 24 missions were flown by U.S. space shuttles without a mishap, including 9 by Challenger. Before the shuttle, 10 Apollo crews safely returned from space, as did 3 Skylab crews. Even in the Space Program's infancy, 14 manned Mercury and Gemini Missions were flown without a loss.

The only other time that our Nation has faced a tragedy of this sort was on a January day 19 years and 1 day ago when fire took the lives of three astronauts on the launch pad. The ill-fated Apollo 1 mission led to a long delay and complete redesign of the Apollo Program, and I would expect the Shuttle Program to be similarly reassessed now.

The shuttle's fate will soon rest on arguments over lost payload, whether future flights should be unmanned, and what role the military will play. I hope such questions, as crucial as they are, do not obscure our vision of all that we have yet to learn in space.

One thing is certain, however: Our next step in space, whether it is taken in a shuttle or some other craft, will not be taken for granted.

TODAY'S HOLOCAUST

HON. TOBY ROTH

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Speaker, I commend to my colleagues the leading editorial which appeared in yesterday's Wall Street Journal entitled "Today's Holocaust." Finally one newspaper has the courage to apply the appropriate terminology to describe the horror of what is happening in Ethiopia. The Ethiopian Government is incarcerating in excess of 1.8 million people in what only can be described as concentration camps. Mortality rates are horrifying—10 times greater than was witnessed during the height of Ethiopia's famine.

This week I will be introducing a comprehensive sanctions bill against Ethiopia's Mengistu regime. The Western public has an urgent responsibility to do something now. I urge my colleagues to join me in this effort.

The article follows:

[From the Wall Street Journal, Jan. 27, 1986]

TODAY'S HOLOCAUST

The word is finally out that the second government-organized group murder in a decade is under way, this time in Ethiopia. The Western public response is showing that the pattern of denial that greeted first reports of the Nazi Holocaust wasn't a fluke. A widespread refusal to believe that the worst could actually happen clears the way for its realization.

French relief workers were touring Washington last week with awful news that had already been reported by eyewitnesses from the U.S. Agency for International Development. The Ethiopian government's year-old "relocation program," now greatly stepped up the military Dergue, or junta, and its Russian patrons, has already claimed the lives of 20 percent of its targets, a death toll of some 100,000. It shapes up as a mass extermination on the order of the Khmer Rouge killing fields and the deportation of Armenians in 1915, with the added horror that it wouldn't have been possible without the aid and silence of Western famine relief.

Now, however, the big relief agencies have to explain why they have been holding their tongues. Administration critics like U.S. Rep. Howard Wolpe who have been whitewashing the Dergue may have to admit that President Reagan's officials haven't just been making anti-Marxist propaganda. Warnings from people like AID administrator M. Peter McPherson have indeed been the awful truth.

The extracts alongside show how ghastly things have really been. They come from a summary of interviews Swiss citizen Peter Niggli conducted with escapees from the Ethiopian relocation camps. Refugee interviews have been available for a long time. (See our editorial "Death in Asosa," Feb. 20, 1985). But the West has hardly listened, let alone reacted.

Indeed, the Addis Ababa regime has found the famine and the Western response to be a stroke of great fortune. Contrary to the government's lies to gullible, or cynical, Westerners, the relocations have nothing to do with fighting hunger. They are part of Ethiopia's civil war with at least five ethnically based guerrilla groups. They were planned as early as 1981, a former Ethiopian general told the head of a Swiss humanitarian group, after the failure of Lt. Col. Mengistu's "Red Star" offensive in the rebel-dominated northeastern provinces of Eritrea and Tigre. According to the government's own maps, the bulk of the conscripts for resettlement come from the strategic corridor connecting Addis Ababa to the coast. The program is directed, not by the regime's Relief and Rehabilitation Commission, but by its "Office for the Nationality Problem," complete with 25 Russian advisers.

To the Tigre and Wollo rebel movements, whose constituents bear the brunt of the relocations, the Mengistu regime's ultimate aim is simply to exterminate their rural base. There is nothing in the conditions of the forced move or the ultimate site to contradict these fears. The "empty fertile lowland" that the Dergue claims to be developing is relatively empty because it is infested by malaria, water parasites and even, at some relocation sites, the deadly tsetse fly. The relocated northerners come from temperate highlands and lack the immunities of the indigenous peoples (who themselves are being forced from their lands). AID's Mr. McPherson began his public condemnations last month after several of his staff managed an unescorted visit to the Pawe relocation camp in the northwest and discovered a continuing death rate from disease of seven to 15 people per 10,000 a day.

Famine relief has helped support "relocation." Its trucks have been diverted to move people, while grain rots at the ports. The roundups have disrupted harvests and forced abandonment of whole herds of livestock. Grain has been taken from famine areas and sent south to maintain the concentration camps. In the meantime, Lt. Col. Mengistu's army has launched its biggest offensive ever into the heart of the famine regions, drawing logistical support from the relief stockpiles while burning the rebels' crops.

The U.S. government deserves credit for its diplomatic resistance to the relocation program, but Western allies have been breaking a previously united front. Italy, with its own memories of Ethiopia, has promised $190 million for a particularly harebrained project at the headwaters of the Blue Nile. Canada and Australia are said to be letting their food aid be diverted. The United Nations World Food Program has buried internal reports that confirm the high death rate.

Denial of the holocaust by Westerners is symptomatic of the larger problem, an unwillingness to do the hard things necessary to stop it. Relief workers kept quiet too long but perhaps can be excused considering the lack of any hard-fisted political action by the governments they represent. At the very least and based on what is now known, relief should be suspended. Then it will be time for the U.S. and Europe to look at what further steps should be taken against Lt. Col. Mengistu and his friends for having so cynically and grossly abused the world's humanitarian impulses.

HELPING FARMERS WITH DEBT

HON. VIN WEBER

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a bill that will help farmers who face foreclosure or debt restructuring, situations that have become increasingly prevalent as the rural economy has continued to deteriorate. I am pleased to have COOPER EVANS, BERKLEY BEDELL, TOM COLEMAN, TOM TAUKE, and ARLAN STANGELAND join me as original cosponsors of this bill.

The tax treatments of capital gains and debt forgiveness have made it very difficult for farmers to deal with their debt situation. In the case of capital gains, it has often added a cruel irony to the pain of foreclosure. As a farmer is forced to leave a farm or home that may have been in his family for generations, he often leaves with a big tax bill from the government.

This anomaly stems from the rapid rise and fall of land values over the last 10 years. A farmer who has to sell his farm may face a big tax bill on his capital gains, which is based largely on depreciated machinery and land he owned before the inflation of the 1970's. But if he bought some land just before the recent and drastic drop in rural land values, the present value of his entire farm may not be enough to secure his loans at the bank. In other words, he could face both foreclosure and a large tax liability.

For those who still have the opportunity to stay on their farms, another tax contingency has made it difficult to negotiate any kind of debt restructuring with their banks. Many bankers are willing to forgive part of a loan as an element of a "workout" plan. The move is in the banker's interest, because it prevents the loss that comes with a foreclosure and often keeps a good farmer on the land. For the farmer, it puts him in a position where he's better able to manage his debt.

However, the IRS treats any loan forgiveness as straight income. As a result, many workout plans leave a farmer with an unmanageable tax liability. Because the resulting taxes would be so high, we will often forgo the whole restructuring package. As a result, many farmers have not been able to restructure their debt and have had to continue their slide toward foreclosure.

My bill brings some flexibility to these situations by giving farmers tax relief in carefully circumscribed areas. First, a farmer would be able to exclude from gross income any capital again, wihch is often only a "paper" gain, that comes from a foreclosure sale. The exclusion would only apply to farmers who are insolvent and are selling off at leat 80 percent of the fair market value of their assets.

Second, my bill would bring greater flexibility to farmers who face a debt restructuring situation. Farmers who are able to negotiate a discharge of indebtedness from their lender would not have to declare it as income. This exemption would be limited to farmers who have a debt to asset ratio of a least 70 percent before debt restructuring.

The unmanageable debt burden of rural America threatens not only agriculture but the rest of the economy as well. This bill will give farmers greater flexibilty in dealing with their debt burden, and it will facilitate the process of debt restructuring that must take place.

FAIR TRADE FOR THE FILM TRADE

HON. BILL RICHARDSON

OF NEW MEXICO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. RICHARDSON. Mr. Speaker, our trade deficit and unfair trade practices by foreign governments are extremely serious issues.

Jack Valenti, president of the Motion Picture Association of America, has written an outstanding article elucidating this serious problem in his industry.

I commend it to the attention of my colleagues.

The article follows:

[From The Los Angeles Times, Jan. 19, 1986]

FAIR TRADE FOR THE FILM TRADE

(By Jack Valenti)

Congressional issues blow in and out of the capital, and few of them leave an impression on the life of the nation more durable than the tracings of dry leaves in the wind. But there is one issue that has a legitimate claim to both longevity and urgency: "fair trade"—or, rather, the lack of it.

During the last session of Congress, there were more than 300 trade bills pending. Many of them were wrapped in generalities, and many of them will likely re-emerge next session to ricochet noisily in the congressional corridors. But some go to the anxious heart of the problem, which is the maintenance of a fair trading level for those American products that want to compete in the world market but are faced with unscalable walls of non-tariff trade barriers.

One need not go into the details of the bleak state of our trading position, which can best be described as miserable. Our trade deficit is like a rampant tumor that may be incurable unless we tend to first priorities: shrinking the value of the dollar, increasing American productivity and demolishing trade barriers in other lands.

The first two of the priorities are difficult and long-term goals. The third is attainable now. This means throwing down a spiked gauntlet to all nations that roam our marketplace with freedom and profit but construct the most ingenious hedgerows barring their marketplace to Americans who want to trade there. Unless these obstacles are dismantled. Americans will be feebly and imperfectly represented in foreign markets, no matter how emaciated the dollar becomes.

By no means does this define "protectionism." Protectionism throws up sandbags of tariffs and quotas to protect native industries.

"Fair trade" is different. Fair trade affirms that the hospitality and lack of restrictions that foreign business interests find so seductive in our country should be visible and active in theirs.

The American film and television industry is a prime example of a home-grown enterprise that asks for no special privileges—no tariffs, no quotas, no barriers in this country—and wants no more than the right to compete fairly and energetically in those countries that are afforded a notably attractive welcome here.

The American film and television industry has a global reach. We return to this country more than $1 billion in surplus balance of trade each year. By whatever gauge you use, this is an asset of considerable worth. It ought to be preserved. That is, it ought not be barred or constructed or diminished in foreign countries for reasons other than lack of customers.

If movies and television programs are the U.S.A's most-wanted exports, it is not because of government subsidy, or because we have a secret that we yearn to shield, or because our product is cheaper to make (in fact, our movie and television production costs are the highest in the world). We have succeeded because we create a special magic that citizens in other lands find bewitching. The stories that we tell on film or tape are sought-after because we tell stories better than most.

Because of our success, a number of friendly nations are affronted. They believe that if they can restrict American films, their film industries will spring up full-blown, flourish and spread. That the theory is spurious makes it no less alluring to government officials.

In Taiwan, for instance, there are no effective copyright laws. Pirates who steal our creative material have full and free rein. Bulky restrictions are inflicted on our films in the form of import quotas, stern limits on the number of films that we can re-release in the country, a large and discriminatory fee imposed on each film, a squeeze on our distribution offices to force us to move our films through Taiwanese distributors, and a hefty box-office tax that is levied only on foreign films. All this from a country with an anticipated trade surplus in 1985 of $13 billion.

In Columbia, we are saddled with onerous taxes and burdened with quotas of all kinds. In Canada, U.S. television programs are snatched from the air by Canadian cable systems with zero payment to those who own the programs. In Quebec, regulations are pending that would effectively seal off the theatrical marketplace to U.S. film distributors in that province. In Spain, in Indonesia, in India, barriers stand guard against us. And the list goes on and on.

In short, one of America's most precious trade assets is endangered. However, if we demonstrate, without hesitation, that our country will insist on fair trading principles, "competitive marketplace" will become more than a phrase; it will be a reality.

LT. COL. ELLISON S. ONIZUKA

HON. NORMAN Y. MINETA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, today the National Air and Space Museum of the Smithsonian Institution honored the crew members who perished in the horrible tragedy which destroyed the space shuttle Challenger on January 28, 1986. A plague was unveiled at the National Air and Space Museum by several Senators and Members of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of Education. The plaque has been placed in front of the Museum's model of the space shuttle and will serve as a reminder to all who come to celebrate the marvels of air and space that men and women have given their lives so that the quest for knowledge may go on for the benefit of all mankind.

I would like to have my own comments on this sad occasion printed for the record.

My comments follow:

As a Regent of the Smithsonian Institution, which has captured, in its Air and Space Museum, the excitement of the exploration of space, I am proud to be at this solemn ceremony.

We are here to salute seven brave Americans. We will miss them not only because they were talented experts, but because they touched our hearts.

One of these brave Americans, Ellison Onizuka, was a personal friend of my wife May, my children, and myself. We met with him many times and have come to care for him a great deal.

As the first American of Japanese ancestry to become an astronaut, he was a hero to the Japanese American community. He attained a dream that many thought was once out of the realm of possibility.

Even to Ellison Onizuka, it sometimes seemed impossible. He told me that though he dreamed all his life of being a pilot, he still found it hard to believe that he achieved—and surpassed—that dream.

Because if him, such achievements seem impossible no more.

He and I share this feeling as Americans of Japanese ancestry; the excitement and disbelief of reaching a goal our parents never thought attainable.

He is an outstanding example of how far Americans of Asian ancestry have progressed, and how they are recognized for their many scientific contributions.

He is a genuine American hero.

We were so very proud of him when he was selected as the first Asian-American astronaut. And he was proud to be a part of such a fine crew.

We are here today to honor this crew in this building which records so many brave deeds and heroic acts.

These seven will always be remembered as pioneers. It is fitting that out salute to them is here, surrounded by their companions in discovery—people like the Wrights, Lindbergh, Earhart, and others who have given their lives in the quest for reaching the sky.

A TRIBUTE TO LOUISE GRAHAM

HON. C.W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the people of St. Petersburg, FL, suffered a great loss Saturday night with the death of Louise Graham.

Mrs. Graham moved to St. Petersburg in 1927 and in the following 59 years became a very close friend to many people in our community. Throughout her life, she gave freely of her time through thousands of hours of volunteer work.

Much of her time was spent working with handicapped and retarded children and adults. She founded the St. Petersburg's Florence Nightingale Circle more than 30 years ago. During the early 1960's she opened the Louise Graham Shelter workshop in her garage. The workshop, which provided help and care to learning disabled children, moved to several different locations throughout the years before arriving at its permanent site in the former Glenoak Elementary School.

Providing tender loving care was Mrs. Graham's secret to success during her 83 years. In return, she received the love and respect of her friends and neighbors in recognition of her selfless service to better the lives of countless children and adults over her lifetime.

Louise Graham was a long-time friend and I share with her family the loss of this wonderful woman, as well as a great American, whose love was felt by so many people. I am fortunate to have been one of those who was touched by the warmth of her abundant love. We will miss Louise Graham.

BUDGET LAW IS CRUEL CHARADE

HON. LANE EVANS

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. EVANS of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, communities throughout the west central Illinois district I represent are taking strong local action to promote economic development and new jobs. These efforts deserve continued Federal encouragement and support. The irresponsible Gramm-Rudman approach to buget cutting will severely reduce or eliminate these valuable Federal programs, doing further damage to our hard-pressed Farm Belt communities.

Mark W. Schwiebert, a member of the Rock Island City Council, expressed his justifiable outrage over the local effects of Gramm-Rudman in the following column from the January 10, 1986 issue of the Quad City (Davenport) Times. I commend his clear-eyed view of the folly of Gramm-Rudman to all of its reluctant supporters.

The article follows:

BUDGET LAW IS CRUEL CHARADE

(By Mark W. Schwiebert)

Congress has passed and President Reagan has signed the Gramm-Rudman act. This legislation, which even its chief sponsor called "a substitute for guts," is our current national government's way of dealing with the grave problem of our national deficit.

The president and Congress, having given us a deficit in the last five years greater than the one accumulated in the prior 200, has whipsawed in the opposite direction by approving what one of Reagan's senior economists labeled "one of the most irresponsible bills ever considered by Congress."

What this sample of national folly will do is radical and dangerous. While protecting a few select programs that consume most of the national budget—such as defense contract spending and entitlement programs—Gramm-Rudman requires that the budget be cut radically in each of the next five years. The effect will be to eliminate virtually every other federal domestic program within the next 24 months.

As someone involved in local government for the last half decade, I have seen firsthand the hardship and severe problems caused by the farm economy depression. Massive unemployment, dwindling benefits, frustration and its byproducts of domestic violence and despair have all reared their ugly heads in these times.

Conscious of these hardships, we have tried to hold the line on local taxes to prevent an added burden on those already hard hit. As a result, virtually all of our local tax dollars are committed to basic services that the city must provide—services like police, fire, water, and sewer and a few amenities such as library and parks that make an area livable.

This means that we have had to look elsewhere for money to pay for critical economic development efforts to create new jobs. Thus, such programs as the Rock Island Economic Growth Corp. and City Revolving Loan Fund, which allow us to promote our area to new industries and provide incentives to businesses to locate here, have all been funded with dollars received from Washington.

Without these efforts we are without the tools we need to compete with Sunbelt communities already prospering from the benefits of warmer climates, lower tax rates and lucrative defense contract handouts from the federal government.

Those of us who live here should be aware of these things. And we should be outraged. For what Washington has one with Gramm-Rudman is either to increase our state and local property and other taxes or to eliminate nearly all of the programs we have to create new jobs and reduce suffering. Neither alternative is acceptable.

In a day when $600 toilet seats and $50 bolts are commonplace in certain parts of Washington and when Illinois already ranks at the bottom of the list in federal tax dollars that return here, this new proposal to the struggling and historic breadbasket of America is obscene.

Let cuts be made in federal spending, but let them be made intelligently and not expediently. We should ask no less of any of our elected leaders than imagination and courage. Both are urgently needed in the nation's capital now.

A LIVING LEGEND

HON. MARY ROSE OAKAR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to submit for the record an article that appeared recently in the Washington Post, about Mr. Ahmet Ertegun who is regarded by many in the music industry as a "legend in his own time."

As founder and CEO of Atlantic Records, Ahmet Ertegun has continued to play a leadership role in the creation, development, and promotion of the American recording industry.

Approximately 40 years ago, Ahmet Ertegun began a small independent company motivated by his own love of music, particularly black music, and by his personal ideals of fairness and equal opportunity for all persons with musical talents, regardless of their racial or ethnic backgrounds

Throughout the years Ahmet Ertegan has been in the forefront of a movement to promote rock and roll, rhythm and blues, and jazz throughout the world as our true American art forms.

Today, Mr. Speaker, American rock and roll is the most popular and most emulated art form in the world. The impact of the music industry has been felt not only in the music we hear on the radio, but in what we wear, and in helping to shape our social conscience.

Mr. Speaker on January 23, 1986, Mr. Ahmet Ertegun, as chairman of the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame Foundation, and other pillars of the recording industry inducted 13 people into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame. Among those inducted were the following legendary recording artists whose music has entertained millions since the 1950's: Chuck Berry, Elvis Presley, Jerry Lee Lewis, James Brown, Fats Domino, Ray Charles, Sam Cooke, Buddy Holly, Little Richard, and the Everly Brothers. Also honored were two men whose contributions to the industry were production, promotion, and playing of those records: Sun Records founder, Sam Phillips, and the late broadcaster Alan Freed from Cleveland, OH, my own district where rock and roll was born.

Mr. Speaker, I would also like to pay tribute to Mr. John Hammond who received a special lifetime achievement award. Mr. Hammond's production and talent scouting credits include, Billie Holliday, Count Basie, Bob Dylan and Bruce Springsteen. John Hammond, like Ahmet Ertegun, has made historic musical and civil rights contributions to the music industry.

I would again like to commend Ahmet Ertegun for his important contributions to the American recording industry.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

THE ROCK OF ATLANTIC

(By Richard Harrington)

NEW YORK.—The long halls leading to Ahmet Ertegun's office are lined with gold and platinum albums, but the office itself is spared that brashness. What dominates is the music; a long row of unplated (and therefore playable) records, piles of demo tapes with dreams attached, pictures of artists, pictures from artists, the occasional awards plaque and a stereo system capable of blasting out the sounds that define Atlantic Records' past, present and future.

On this weekday afternoon, Ertegun is fielding the tapes that come to him as chairman of the board of Atlantic. Over four decades, he has transformed this once-tiny rhythm and blues label into a major link in the conglomerate chain known as Warner/Elektra/Atlantic. Fueled by the success of such artists as Phil Collins, Stevie Nicks, Twisted Sister, Pete Townshend and several monster sound tracks, Atlantic is having its best year ever for sales volume. W/E/A will do close to $600 million worth of business, with Atlantic probably accounting for a third of that.

Trim, dapper, debonair, his grayng goatee anchoring a head that has been bald since he was 17, Ertegun is the quintessential CEO. He and his wife Mica, a well-known decorator, are fixtures at the ritziest social events and parties on several continents. Ertegun is a lender of Russian Constructivist and American abstract paintings to some of the world's most prestigious museums, a one-time president of the New York Cosmos soccer team, a multimillionaire mover and shaker.

"I'm an old-timer, I still call them sides," Ertegun says in the clipped aristocratic cadence that reveals his cosmopolitan roots. His father, Mehmet Munir Ertegun, was Turkey's ambassador in Washington from 1934 until 1944.

Ahmet Ertegun is no stranger to recorded revelations. The music sought out back in the late '40s and early '50s was rhythm and blues, and the Atlantic Sound—in the form of Joe Turner, Ruth Brown, Ray Charles, the Coasters, Clovers and Drifters, LaVern Baker and others—was as popular and influential as the Motown Sound would be a decade later. It also helped set the stage for rock 'n' roll.

Ertegun is very much in the mold of the old movie men such as Louis B. Mayer and Sam Goldwyn, self-made tycoons. There were others like him—Marshall Chess, Lew Chudd at Imperial, Art Rupe at Specialty—tough entrepreneures who tapped into the emerging black pop music known as rhythm and blues. They all came up in the late '40s and early '50s. By the '60s, they'd either folded or curtailed their activities.

Only Atlantic survived and prospered, and only Ertegun managed to turn a minor label into a major. Not bad for a man who used to have to go to the bank before every recording session to see if he could afford it. In 1967, the Ertegun brothers and Jerry Wexler, the company's principal stockholder, sold control of Atlantic to Warner Bros.-Seven Arts in exchange for $17 million in stock. His older brother Nesuhi, who has been with the company since 1955, is president of W/E/A International. Ahmet Ertegun, 61, has remained as chairman of the board at Atlantic, a position with such historical impact that he's been dubbed "The Greatest Rock 'n' Roll Mogul in the World."

How Ahmet Ertegun came to his moguldom may be the most unusual story in American music.

"I was born in Istanbul, but left at 2, and I never really spent any time there," he says. His father had ambassadorial stints in Bern, Geneva, Paris and London, but "if anybody asks me where I'm from, my first inclination is to say Washington, because that's where I grew up meaningfully."

Like his older brother Nesuhi, Ahmet Ertegun went to local schools. He prepped, first at St. Albans and then at Landon, went to college in Annapolis (at St. John's, graduating at 20 near the top of his class).

His father was the senior ambassador in Washington during World War II, an immensely popular and powerful figure. When he died in 1944, President Roosevelt dispatched his body home aboard the USS Missouri. Had the father lived, it's probable the son wouldn't have entered the record business.

"He would have pushed us to return to Turkey and go into civil service," Ertegun says. "My father's father was a judge, and my mother's father was an admiral in the navy and my father was a diplomat and public servant. It was a tradition. . . . My brother and I decided to stay in America because we wanted to live in America, and we chose the business that we love because we loved American music."

The Erteguns loved the music made by the black Americans in particular, a passion that had been instilled when Ahmet was still in short pants.

"The first time I heard a black orchestra was Cab Calloway at the Palladium in London," he says fondly. "I must have been around 9 or 10 years old. There was just the dazzling presence of these black gentlemen—I hadn't seen many black people at that time—in their white, shining suits . . . the brass instruments shining . . . the rhythm and the excitement of the music."

By the time the brothers came to Washington in 1934, they were already inveterate jazz collectors. "We had to go hunting in used-record shops and also go from house to house in the black sections of not only Washington but neighboring towns in Virginia and Maryland, asking people if they had old records for sale. Most of those jazz records were released as part of what they used to call "race" series and that was the only place you could find them. In those days, there were no reissues, so you had to look for the originals."

Eventually the Erteguns amassed 25,000 blues and jazz records, all catalogued and indexed, with personnel written on jacket sleeves. "I realize now we must have had one of the biggest collections in the world," Ertegun says ruefully. When they left the embassy, they had to sell off most of it.

The young Erteguns' passion for the music wasn't confined to 78s, either. They promoted some of the earliest jazz concerts in Washington during the '30s, at the Jewish Community Center, the National Press Club, Turner's Arena. And on Sundays, they turned the Turkish Embassy into an open house for visiting jazz musicians.

"We'd invite people to have lunch at the embassy—Ellington, the Basie band, Lester Young—and then there were informal jam sessions in the afternoon. It was fun for them, there was no obligation for them to do anything but come and have a good time."

And of course there was the Howard Theatre, the mecca for black entertainment. "I went there almost every week, because every week there was a great band there and I didn't want to miss any of them. I got my education in music at the Howard."

After his father's death, Ertegun's family returned to Turkey, while he remained in graduate school at Georgetown studying philosophy. "But I loved the music, and I knew many of the musicians and singers personally," he says, "so I thought it would be really fun to make some records."

Ertegun had been a regular at Max Silverman's Quality Music Shop at Seventh and T streets, and it was there that Atlantic was previewed.

"Aside from the fact that I bought records there many years before when it was a used-record business, we'd become very good friends. It was the hot record shop in Washington, so I used to just hang around there a lot in the afternoon. At one point we formed a label, Quality Records, and recorded two or three sessions, which turned out quite well but did not do well. That somehow folded right away.

"But I was intent on going on with it. I had a friend, my dentist in Washington, who decided he would invest $10,000, and Herb Abramson [a fellow record collector and executive with National Records] came in and put up a little money, and we started Atlantic Records."

Atlantic started in New York, even though Ertegun's move there was gradual. He was still going to school at Georgetown, living on Q Street and "coming to New York on long week-ends. I slept more hours on the train between Washington and New York than I did in my own bed."

For the first few years, Atlantic had only minor hits. Ironically, for a label that would eventually be lauded for its stable of great singers, those first records tended to be instrumentals. But Ertegun wasn't worried.

"For me it was so much fun just to go up to Harlem and hang out at the various clubs' amateur shows where you could hear new talent. Frankly, I never thought we were going to have a big record company. I thought we were just passing a little time, doing this to add a little bit of money to my student allowance, which wasn't very big."

Neither was Atlantic, but like a number of other small, independent labels, it was tuned in to the new currents in popular music emerging after World War II. Rhythm and blues was at first a catchall phrase encompassing black swing bands, harmony groups, blues shouters, funky jazz combos, boogie-woogie pianists—all kinds of music that the major record companies despised.

"In the early days there was a great camaraderie between the various independent record companies," Ertegun recalls. "We made records that the majors would not make, and we made music that the majors actually fought against. Variety and RCA started a big campaign against the product of independent labels, records with 'obscene' lyrics—until they signed up Elvis Presley. Then suddenly the campaign against this kind of music and those kind of lyrics stopped."

One thing that set Atlantic apart from many of its competitors was its reputation for paying its artists the royalties they deserved. Unlike some of the independent bosses, opportunists who had little interest in the music or the musicians, Ertegun was a genuine fan, not just an entrepreneur.

"Frankly it never occurred to me not to pay royalties to artists," Ertegun says. "We treated our artists as stars because we were all fans . . . I think that's what made Atlantic survive where some of the others didn't. We kept our artists for many years. They developed and became stars and stayed with us."

Atlantic prospered also because Ertegun and his partners (notably Wexler) began, as producers, to fuse a northern sophistication with a gutsy southern blues sensibility, achieving a cleaner, brighter sound than rhythm and blues had known.

"What we were trying to do was to make rhythm and blues records that would sell to a black audience but also had the potential of crossing over. A lot of our records did cross over, successfully enough to make big white artists cover them."

Ertegun suggests a context of radio in the '50s that sounds remarkably like radio in the '80s. "There was a definite Jim Crow attitude on the part of the broadcasting industry, and there were very few disc jockeys on white stations who would play any black music except for pop singers like Nat King Cole or the Mills Brothers. They wouldn't play Joe Turner or Ruth Brown or Ray Charles. As a result, when their songs started to have some white sales based on white audiences listening to black stations, white artists would cover the song, use our arrangements and immediately get on radio. That happened many times, but the worst was the Chords' 'Sh-Boom,' which the Crewcuts covered. If they hadn't we would have sold a couple of million. As it was we sold six or seven hundred thousand."

At that point, Ertegun and Wexler were producing all of Atlantic's releases, even singing backup when it was needed (that's Ertegun on the chorus of Joe Turner's "Shake, Rattle and Roll"). And then there was the sudden emergence of a new songwriter on such raucous hits as Joe Turner's "Sweet Sixteen," Ray Charles' "Mess Around," the Drifters' "Watcha Gonna Do?," Ruth Brown's "Wild Wild Young Men" and a half dozen hits by the Clovers. His name was A. Nugetre, which looked suspiciously like Ertegun spelled backwards.

"We had a tough time finding good material," Ertegun explains with a smile. "The publishers were not sending us material to record. They never sent companies our size good material.

"So there was only one thing to do. I tried to write very funky songs because we had to sell records in the South—that was our biggest market—and to do that we had to have really funky music. The artists we had were sophisticated, urban artists who looked down on the blues, so I had to write songs that were so funky that there was no other way for them to sing it than to get down with it. I never considered myself a great songwriter but I had to get some hits to survive."

Ertegun's Washington connection is more than just an emotional one. Among the first acts signed to Atlantic were two discovered here: Ruth Brown and the Clovers. The process would be repeated in the early '70s with Roberta Flack and Donny Hathaway and in the early '80s with Stacy Lattisaw and Johnny Gill. Earlier this year, Ertegun made a quick trip to Washington to check out local recording studios, and some felt, to check out the go-go scene. Critics pointed out that Atlantic, which had once been on the cutting edge of black pop, had totally missed the rap and hip hop explosions and might be seeking to reestablish its connections to black currents.

From the '60s on, the history of Atlantic is that of an extremely successful company. It can be told in terms of sales figures and critical successes and special moments and special relationships. Or it can be defined in the great distance between the first cramped offices at 56th and Broadway and the current ones at 75 Rockefeller Plaza.

Thirty years ago, Ahmet Ertegun considered letting the company go on while he went to Turkey for a couple of years. "But I couldn't leave it for two weeks because we had so much competition, and we had to keep the thing going. I still don't feel like we're anywhere safe because you don't know when your 10 top artists are going to suddenly stop selling records. So you've got to have 20 new ones coming up to take their place."

As 1985 comes to a close, Ertegun seems to be coming to terms with his company's place in the history of American popular culture. Atlantic has just released a 14-record collection that confirms the label's eminence in the pop field, particularly in the '50s, and again in the mid-'60s with such soul stylists as Aretha Franklin, Otis Redding, Wilson Pickett and the Stax-Volt stable.

Ertegun has also been spearheading the drive to establish a legitimate Rock 'n Roll Hall of Fame (the first 10 inductees will be honored at a New York dinner in early January, though a permanent site for the museum has not yet been chosen).

Our aim is to, in a dignified manner, recognize the people who created the music which has become the most popular music of all time in the world," he explains. "Rock 'n' roll is a form of music which has been vilified and looked down on; however, it's a very vibrant and important American music."

You can't help feeling that, without Atlantic, the music might have been vibrant, but it wouldn't have been the same. The new collection certainly reinforces that.

"We did a thorough search on which were the bestselling records, the historically important records of various artists, records which, if they weren't big sellers, were an influence on other records that were made after that," Ertegun says.

"I'm very proud of that collection because it is the history of this company and of many years of my life."

Clearly, the man who built Atlantic Records has every right to be proud. But later, watching him listen to the rough playback of Charelle, his eyes closed in concentration, the barest hint of a satisfied smile edging from his mouth, you suspect Ahmet Ertegun is still a fan—and that he wouldn't have it any other way.

ISSUES BEHIND TERRORISM

HON. NICK JOE RAHALL II

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an editorial from my hometown newspaper, the Register/Herald of Beckley, WV, January 13, 1986. In it, Walter Massey, the editor, provides a thoughtful insight into the underlying issues of the Middle East controversy. While I have always contended that there are more sides to the dispute in the Middle East than are on a Rubik's Cube, I feel that Mr. Massey takes a good look at the underlying causes of terrorism and some possible steps that might be taken to prevent such heinous acts in the future. I urge all of my colleagues to read it.

ISSUES BEHIND TERRORISM

America would be better able to settle Palestinian grievances if the blame, as Palestinians see it, were against America directly. But it is not. It is against Israel.

Israel has a case for occupying the area which now is the Jewish state. After all, the area is the ancient homeland of the Jewish people, who were driven out centuries ago by ancestors of those who now call themselves Palestinians.

World War II, with its holocaust, brought into sharp focus for the Jewish people their longing to reclaim for themselves the terrority of their ancestors. Thus, accomplished by the Zionist movement, Jews did return, following World War II, to the Mideast and did reclaim their land.

However, in the process of reestablishing the state of Israel, the Jews drove out of Palestine people who had lived there for centuries.

Since then, many Palestinians have chosen to live as permanent refugees rather than to settle in any other land and concede to Israel territory which they owned until some 40 years ago.

The current terrorism stems from a quarrel that has not been settled, despite several wars and countless acts of violence.

The Arab states are virtually united in opposition to Israel. The Arabs, whose religious roots are intertwined with those of Israel, share the Semitic heritage of the Jews. But they do not recoginze the Jewish claim to Israel based on the holy scriptures of the Jewish faith.

If one reads the Old Testament, it's evident that the people of Israel quarreled with their neighbors beginning as long ago as 10,000 years. The modern Mideast quarrel is but a blinking of the eye compared to the duration of the hostilities in what often is called the Holy Land.

Can this quarrel be settled? Is it within the powers of human reason to render decisions which all will recognize as just?

America in modern times has attempted to serve as a broker for peace, even while guaranteeing the survival of Israel. Some in the Arab world might argue that America cannot do both, but that's another story.

The real question is whether American leaders or anyone else can satisfy the Palestinian people, as columnist Mary McGrory suggests should be done, while Israel continues to exist in security.

Some Palestinians are absolutists. They will settle for nothing less than the destruction of Israel. Thus, America cannot oblige them.

Other Palestinians are more moderate. Some wish accommodation with Israel which exchanges their recognition of the Jewish state for territory, perhaps the captured West Bank of the Jordan River.

But some Israelis can be just as intransigent as some Palestinians. Hard-line Israeli leaders have refused even to talk to Palestinian leaders. To the Israeli hard-liners, all Palestinians are terrorists.

Trust is mutually lacking. Hatreds are rampant, both on the part of many Israelis and many Arabs.

When two peoples both believe they legitmately own the same land, and when these peoples hate and distrust each other, obviously this is not a quarrel easily solved. Negotiations could take generations.

The effort to achieve peace should be ceaseless, and America should do what it can to further the process.

But America cannot unilaterally devise a solution and impose it on any of the parties involved. The parties must come to accord of their choosing.

A starting point would be face-to-face talks between Israel and leaders of the Palestinians and contiguous Arab states.

The U.S. should pressure Israel to agree in principle to such talks.

Meanwhile, however, America must protect itself from Islamic terrorism. Despite McGrory's good intentions, our country can't depend on negotiations which may take a lifetime to protect Americans in European airports today.

The problem is more immediate. There may be no substitute for force.

A TRIBUTE TO MARYANNE LEHRER

HON. NORMAN F. LENT

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. LENT. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to bring to the attention of my colleagues that on Sunday, February 2, 1986, Mrs. Maryanne Lehrer will be honored as the Oceanside Free School District's "Woman of the Year" at the annual brotherhood breakfast sponsored by the Rocky Marciano Lodge No. 2226 O.S.I.A. and the Trophy Lodge No. 2059 B'nai B'rith. Maryanne is a constituent of mine from Oceanside, NY, and has worked with diligence and love for the betterment of the children of her community.

A member of the Oceanside Board of Education since 1977, Maryanne was selected by her fellow board members to serve two terms as vice president and two terms as president of the board. In addition, she serves as chairman of the Board's legislative committee.

Maryanne has widened the scope of her activities on behalf of education beyond the Oceanside School District through her participation as a member of the executive board and legislative committee of the Nassau/Suffolk School Board Association. She also serves as liaison from the Fourth Congressional District to the Federal Relations Network of the National School Board Association. Her active involvement with countywide and national organizations has allowed Maryanne to provide insights into State and Federal legislation to her colleagues on the board of education and better serve the parents and children of the Oceanside School District.

A leader in many civil and youth-oriented programs, Maryanne has received much-deserved praise for her activities. She has been elected to Kappa Delta Phi and is a lifetime member not only of the New York Parent Teachers Association, but the national PTA as well. She is the founder of the Long Island Food and Hunger Awareness Program, and is active in the Nassau/Suffolk Autistic Society, the Epilepsy Foundation, the Women's American ORT, and the American Cancer Society.

I would like to offer my warmest congratulations to Maryanne on being selected as Woman of the Year, and on behalf of the people of the Fourth Congressional District, I'd like to extend my best wishes for her continued efforts benefiting the children and the entire Oceanside community.

A TRIBUTE TO THE MARSHALL PHILHARMONIC ORCHESTRA

HON. E. THOMAS COLEMAN

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, the Marshall Philharmonic Orchestra has brought great pride and pleasure to North Missourians for the past 23 years. On December 30, the symphony played to its largest audience to date—nearly 20 million people nationwide tuned in to NBC's "American Alamanac" which featured the symphony and its founder/director, Harold Lickey of Marshall, MO.

The Marshall Philharmonic performs all the classics from Bach to Beethoven, as well as the modern classics. Its sound has been compared to the National Symphony Orchestra and other renown orchestras in America, yet the Marshall Philharmonic has a distinguished feature: the conductor and his orchestra are not musicians by trade; they are, simply, members of the community who love music and bringing its joy to their family, friends and neighbors who attend the symphony's concerts each year.

Harold Lickey cofounded the symphony 23 years ago when he was chairman of the Marshall High School music department. Today, people from across North Missouri belong to the orchestra. They range from all ages and positions in life, from a sixth-grade cellist to an 83-year-old bassoonist. They meet for rehearsals on Sunday afternoons at the high school and hold three or four performances a year at Bueker Middle School. Most of the support for the orchestra comes from voluntary contributions. To further help the group, the town established an endowment fund this year.

I'm proud to represent in Congress these talented Americans who have brought enrichment to their communities, and to bring to your attention the town of Marshall, MO which has received the national acclaim it has earned for being the smallest town in the United States to have a symphony orchestra.

AMERICAN CIVIL LIBERTIES UNION OFFERS TO BUY THE U.S. JUSTICE DEPARTMENT

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, Washington is a town of political fads, and one of the most popular fads of the Reagan administration is the selling of public agencies to the private sector. Even a new word, "privatization," has been created to describe the phenomenon, which is underpinned by the belief that Government management is cumbersome and wasteful, while private sector management is smooth and efficient.

True to its doctrine that all Federal agencies, except for the Defense Department, are grossly mismanaged, the Reagan administration's Department of Justice has been working tirelessly to obstruct the cause of justice and equality in America. Recognizing that the Department is fast approaching bankruptcy, on December 17 the American Civil Liberties Union [ACLU] made a formal offer to Attorney General Edwin Meese to purchase the entire Justice Department, or alternately, its Civil Rights Division. It is an offer that I hope Attorney General Meese, along with my colleagues in the House and Senate, will think about carefully.

The text of the ACLU press release follows:

ACLU Offers To Buy the Justice Department

The American Civil Liberties Union, in a move unanticipated on Wall Street, today offered to buy the United States Justice Department.

The offer came in a letter to Attorney General Edwin Meese only days after President Reagan had proposed to sell the Federal Housing Administration to private interests, on the ground that they could do a better job than the government.

"We think the same the same can be said about the Justice Department," said Ira Glasser, ACLU Executive Director. "Civil rights and civil liberties organizations are already doing much of the work that should be done by the Justice Department, and particularly by its Civil Rights Division," Glasser said. "Civil rights lawyers are increasingly functioning as 'private attorneys-general,' enforcing laws that the Justice Department is failing to enforce," he said. "We might as well go all the way."

Just as President Reagan proposed to sell the Federal Housing Administration, including all its assets and liabilities, Glasser said the ACLU was "prepared to take over the entire Justice Department, including its assets and liabilities, which are many."

The leveraged buyout of the Justice Department, Wall Street insiders said, would be the largest in history, dwarfing the recent purchase by General Electric of RCA. But Glasser said that it wouldn't cost as much as anticipated because "the net worth of the Department has plummeted since Mr. Meese became Attorney General, and investors have lost confidence in top management."

"Indeed," said Glasser, "those with a long-term investment in justice believe that the Department is now nearly bankrupt. An examination by our auditors of the balance sheet of its key unit, the Civil Rights Division, shows liabilities exceeding assets to an alarming degree."

It was not immediately clear how the offer would be received in Washington, but Mr. Meese was undoubtedly consulting the Federalist Papers in an attempt to find what the framers' original intentions were with respect to such an offer.

Meanwhile, Glasser said the ACLU would be willing to consider purchasing only the Civil Rights Division, if Mr. Meese found that offer more acceptable. "That part of the company is potentially its most valuable asset," said Glasser, "and the one that the government seems the least interested in developing."

ADMIRAL FARRAGUT ACADEMY CELEBRATES 40TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. C.W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, the Admiral Farragut Academy, which has become a St. Petersburg, FL, landmark, celebrates its 40th anniversary this year.

With almost 300 students, the school is one of only 52 preparatory military academies left in the United States. Capt. Richard Wheeler has been the academy's headmaster for the past 10 years and has continued the school's reputation of providing an outstanding education to students planning to continue their studies at colleges and universities throughout our Nation.

Admiral Farragut students have earned the respect and are a welcome part of the St. Petersburg community. I have had the opportunity to participate in their commencement excercises and have watched with pride their full dress parades and drills.

Millie Moyer, whose husband was an early executive director of the school, dedicated 35 years to the academy in many roles, including social director. She and her husband lived on campus and their son was a academy graduate. The Moyers are representative of the hundreds of faculty members and students who have contributed to the history of the Admiral Farragut Academy. They are a part of a St. Petersburg tradition that has instilled discipline, enhanced the education, and touched the lives of students for the past four decades.

THE DRUG PROBLEM HITS ALL AREAS OF SOCIETY

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, this past Sunday America watched yet another Super Bowl. As we watched the Chicago Bears rout the New England Patriots, in what has become a national tradition, heroes were created and new legends were born. Professional athletes hold a special place in our society—they are respected and loved by fans and admired by young children.

While we all sat back and enjoyed the game and watched as the Bears celebrated their victory, another story—an ugly, disturbing story surfaced. Today it has been revealed that the New England Patriots have a serious drug problem and they have become the first team in the National Football League to agree to undergo voluntary drug testing.

This unfortunate incident simply underscores the alarming pervasiveness of the drug problem in this country. In my view, it is a national tragedy when our sports heroes openly admit that they have serious problems with drug abuse. First it was baseball this past summer. Now this scandal in the wake of our cherished Super Bowl and all the tradition surrounding football. As a former drug counselor, I am all too well aware of the enormous dangers of substance abuse and how substance abuse can ruin a person's life and tear apart families.

A nation is shocked over the pronouncements by the New England Patriots—but let us not be fooled. Drug abuse is a problem, not of the rich, not of the privileged, but of society as a whole. Recent polls have shown that many Americans rank drug abuse as one this Nation's greatest problems. I agree. While many people are concerned over the drug problem, the do not know how to adequately confront it.

As a former drug counselor I recognize the vital importance of educating our young people—and their parents—about the whole spectrum of substance abuse. Such education should begin at an early age and should continue through high school. Many schools across the country have already undertaken excellent programs in substance abuse. But, unfortunately, many have not. Parents need to get more involved and informed about substance abuse. Substance abuse education programs are not uniform and vary greatly from school to school, and State to State.

I have introduced legislation, H.R. 3769, the "National Substance Abuse Education Act," that I feel would be an important first step in getting all school districts to adopt sound substance abuse education programs for students and parents. The bill would establish a wide range of guidelines for State educational agencies to follow in developing a substance abuse education program to become a mandatory part of the curriculum for grades 4 through 12. States that do not, after 2 years, develop a program satisfactory to the Secretary of Education, would lose 30 percent of the Federal funds provided under chapter 2 of the Education Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981. States financially unable to meet the requirements set forth in the bill could adopt an alternative program that does not require that substance abuse education courses become a mandatory part of the curriculum.

Both programs under the bill emphasize both student and parent education about the full range of topics involving substance abuse. The important thing to note is that the bill sets clear and uniform guidelines for State educational agencies to follow in developing education programs in substance abuse. Of course States would have the leeway to develop programs tailored to existing needs. Schools that already have in place substance abuse education programs can use the guidelines to build upon and improve their programs. Other schools that have yet to make substance abuse education priority, would have an excellent guide in developing a viable program.

The recent drug problem announced by the New England Patriots is a national tragedy. It underlines the need for America to face up to its problem with drugs—as the Patriots have done. We must recognize this problem as one that affects all of our lives. Aggressive education efforts can make a difference. Enactment of H.R. 3769 would be an important first step in addressing this national problem.

SCIENTIFIC INNOVATIONS AT BATTELLE

HON. SID MORRISON

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. MORRISON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues the recognition that has recently been extended to Battelle's Pacific Northwest Laboratories and several of its scientists for scientific innovations.

Science Digest surveyed over 1,200 corporations, universities, colleges, science and engineering associations, nonprofit institutions, and government agencies for nominations of significant innovations in science. I am pleased to report that of the 100 scientific accomplishments, 2 had their springboard at Battlelle. According to Science Digest, the men and women whose innovations are recognized as the top 100 in the United States are the vanguard of America's scientific revolution. "They are the inventors and innovators, responsible for creating our vision of the future. They deserve recognition."

Dr. Richard Smith of Battelle was recognized for developing a process for forming fine powder substances of uniform particle size. The powders are finer than those made by grinding. Fine coatings can be sprayed on delicate surfaces such as optical lenses and microelectric components.

Science Digest also recognized Dr. Richard Douthart and a team of Battelle researchers for the development of a computer aided design system for genetic engineering. This system uses genetic information and DNA sequence information to produce hypothetical designs of genetic structures that have many potential biotechnological applications including food and agriculture, petroleum, pharmaceuticals, and the chemical engineering industries.

Mr. Speaker, these scientists at Battelle, as well as the other individuals who were recognized by Science Digest, deserve our recognition. If this country is to regain its former position as being the world's leading practitioner of using science to preserve our position in the world's competitive marketplace, we must create an environment where scientific accomplishments are applauded.

As a member of the Science and Technology Committee I have a deep sense of appreciation of what our science and engineering resources can do to solve technical problems and create new products and processes. I would like to recognize just two examples of scientific progress, conducted by my constituents, that will continue to help the United States maintain its role in the technology marketplace. My congratulations to Battelle for doing its part.

TRIBUTE TO JAMES CROWLEY

HON. JOSEPH M. McDADE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. McDADE. Mr. Speaker, Jim Crowley, a resident of my congressional district and a legend of the sports world, died recently. His football expertise and his ability to lead and serve will be greatly missed. Jim was a mentor to many young people who later went on to successful careers, and they will miss his counsel and guidance as well.

Jim was the last living member of the famous Four Horsemen of Notre Dame. In 1924, the Four Horsemen pushed Knute Rockne's team to a 9–0 regular-season record and 17–10 Rose Bowl upset over Stanford.

It was during that successful 1924 season that Jim Crowley and Don Miller, covering the halfback positions, Harry Stuhldreher, the fearless quarterback, and Elmer Layden, fullback, were nicknamed the Four Horsemen.

Grantland Rice, sportswriter for the New York Times, holds the honor for naming the Notre Dame backfield the Four Horsemen. He wrote, after Notre Dame's 13–7 victory over Army on October 18, 1924:

> Outlined against a blue, gray October sky the Four Horsemen rode again. In dramatic lore they are known as famine, pestilence, destruction and death. These are only aliases. Their real names are: Stuhldreher, Miller, Crowley and Layden. They formed the crest of the South Bend cyclone before which another fighting Army team was swept over the precipice at the Polo Grounds this afternoon as 55,000 spectators peered down upon the bewildering panorama spread out upon the green plain below.

As a Notre Dame alumnus, I remember the aura of the Four Horsemen and I am sure it will live on forever throughout the halls of the fighting Irish.

Jim was a member of the National Football Foundation Hall of Fame, and the 1924 All-American Team. After graduation from Notre Dame in 1925, Jim went on to briefly play football for the Green Bay Packers and the Providence Steam Rollers.

Jim was also well known for his coaching abilities at the University of Georgia, Michigan State University, and Fordham University. He took Fordham to two bowl games.

Jim's mark on college football will be felt for many years. He was instrumental in the design of the Heisman Trophy, awarded annually to college football's most outstanding player.

Jim will be missed by many, but the legend that he created lives on to inspire countless others.

TO A NEW LEADER, BISHOP EDMOND BROWNING

HON. DANIEL K. AKAKA

OF HAWAII

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. AKAKA. Mr. Speaker, I look forward to joining with my colleagues in celebration of a great new leader, Edmond Lee Browning.

On January 11, here in Washington, DC, the Most Reverend Edmond Browning was installed as the 24th presiding bishop of the American Episcopalian Church. Having served with distinction as the bishop of my home State of Hawaii for the past 11 years, Bishop Browning now looks forward to serving a 12-year term as head of the American church. He is a singularly distinguished choice. In Bishop Browning, Hawaii's loss is truly the whole country's gain. For, in Bishop Browning, we have a man with a spirit of compassion, honor, and justice.

Bishop Browning has wasted no time in making clear to us his very real knowledge and understanding of our modern world in his address on the occasion of his installation. Recognizing the elements which alarm many, if not all of us, Bishop Browning spoke of the pain which exists around us. "There are tears of despair which we refuse to see," he said. "There are cries for help which we do not hear. There are those reaching out to be embraced whom we will not touch," he stressed.

In a world where "super powers posture over arms agreements while the lives of our children hang in the balance"; where "unjust governments deny basic human rights while inflicting torture and suffering upon millions of its citizens"; while "we live in an age where we have the technology to feed the world, and instead, millions are hungry and thousands die every day," Bishop Browning calls upon us, the "faithful politicians," to speak out against injustice such as the evil of apartheid and to stand up for the principles we value as people.

Bishop Browning further reminds us of the words of a great leader, John Kennedy, who called us to a vision 25 years ago, a vision where the "strong are just, the weak are secure and the peace preserved."

In Bishop Browning, I am certain that words such as these shall lose neither their significance, nor their direction. I extend my most sincere good wishes to this wonderful new leader.

TERRI FRANCIS JACKSON: SONGSTRESS AND HUMANITARIAN

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to call to the attention of our colleagues the outstanding career and personal journey of Terri Francis Jackson.

Ms. Jackson was born 60 years ago in New York City, but was raised in Hillburn, NY, in Rockland County. She began singing in church choirs when she was only 4, and became a professional blues artist as a protege of the late great tenor saxaphonist, Gene Ammons. Throughout her career as a jazz/blues singer, she had worked in 42 States and made USO tours in Europe and Asia. She was particularly appreciated by resort audiences in southeastern New York, who compared her unique voice to Della Reese and Carmen McRae.

Tragedy struck Terri Francis Jackson in 1974, by way of a massive heart attack. A year later, she was declared legally blind. She subsequently became crippled by arthritis and has fought an ongoing battle against cancer and diabetes. Terri Francis Jackson suffered blows of fate which would have justly led others to withdraw from life.

Such was not the case with Terri Francis Jackson. Declaring, "I am not handicapped, I am handicapable," Ms. Jackson devoted her beautiful voice and her life to helping others. She has performed in and sponsored many benefit concerts to raise funds for scholarships for minority and handicapped students, for the Easter Seals Society, and the Handi-Van and Horton Memorial Hospital in Middletown, NY.

Not only did Terri not allow her physical problems to interfere with her work for others, she pursued her own educational goals, obtaining an associate of applied science degree in human services from Schenectady County Community College at the age of 55, and completing the requirements for a bachelors degree from Empire State College.

A reporter once wrote:

At the drop of a hat, Terri will manage to get herself and her wheelchair anywhere she can make music for the benefit of others. She will sing to raise money, she sings to bring pleasure to hospital patients, she sings for the joy of singing.

Mr. Speaker, on February 9, John Moultrie Productions Co., with the cooperation of the Arts Council of Orange Country, NY, will present a benefit concert honoring Terri Francis Jackson. Some of the leading figures of show buisness and in public life in the mid-Hudson region will come together to pay tribute to this unique, distinguished individual, whose life and accomplishments have been an inspiration to us all.

Mr. Speaker, I invite our colleagues to join in paying tribute to the remarkable Terri Francis Jackson.

A TRIBUTE TO RAUL VELASCO

HON. SOLOMON P. ORTIZ

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. ORTIZ. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to commend and pay tribute to Mr. Raul Velasco, host of the "Siempre en Domingo" television show, for his efforts in promoting Charro Days activities and his leadership in the Hispanic community.

Charro Days, which originated as a prelenten festival, is a 4-day celebration in which the United States and Mexico are joined in celebration of the cultures of these neighboring countries. During this time, there are a series of parades, dances, and parties to demonstrate the goodwill of both countries. It is a well-planned, major function which is enjoyed and eagerly anticipated by south Texans as well as our winter visitors.

Every year the city of Brownsville, represented by the Mr. Amigo Association, travels to Mexico City to select a new Mr. Amigo to serve as honored guest of Charro Days. This person is selected on the basis of his contribution to international friendship and development of mutual understanding and cooperation between the two nations.

Mr. Velasco was honored with the Mr. Amigo Award 13 years ago. He has since demonstrated his support for the Charro Days Association and the city of Brownsville by televising and promoting Charro Days activities on his television program "Siempre en Domingo." His program is viewed by over 130 million viewers weekly in such faraway countries as France, Italy, Holland, Japan, Korea, Panama, Venezuela, Equador, and Chile to name a few. Mr. Velasco strives to use his television show as an effective vehicle to educate and acquaint his viewing audience with the history and diversity of the Mexican culture. His presentation of the cross section of the many Hispanic cultures, which includes singers and movie stars and various talent acts, is viewed by Latin American countries all over the world.

Mr. Velasco has given so much of his time and effort on behalf of the Charro Days Association, and the Mr. Amigo Association as well. It is only befitting to pay such a high tribute to him for all his contributions to the Hispanic society. Without Mr. Velasco's contributions, in the way of his time, energy, and enthusiasm that he has given to promoting the Charro Days festivities, the yearly celebration would not be as widely known and enjoyed. I would like to express my deep appreciation for all he has contributed to making Charro Days a truly international event.

SUPERVISOR ROBERT O. TOWNSEND RETIRES FROM BOARD JANUARY 29, 1986

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a long-time friend and colleague, Mr. Robert O. Townsend. Since 1974, Bob Townsend has served on the San Bernardino County Board of Supervisors and has had the honor of chairing the board for 4 of those 11 years. Upon his retirement, the board, and the county, will lose a dedicated servant.

Bob demonstrates all that a public official can hope to be. He is a man of integrity; his first priority being the citizens of San Bernardino County. His administrative talents are many, reflected in his terms as chairman of the board. Bob's dedication to the county is far reaching; his involvement in public affairs extends much further than the board of supervisors.

Through the years, Bob Townsend has been a driving force in the county. His leadership has manifested itself in various appointments to community groups. He was the project leader for San Bernardino County and commissioner of the California Public/Private Partnership Commission. Bob has served on the mayor's and President's Policy Committee, the San Bernardino County Public Improvements Authority, and the San Bernardino County Building Authority, to name just a few.

Bob has proven himself invaluable to the county on issues such as transportation, flood control, and power. His concern for the citizens of this valley have been demonstrated countless times through his involvement in organizations such as the Tri-County Council on Criminal Justice, the County Emergency Medical Authority, the Inland Manpower Association, the County Disaster Council, and the Air Pollution Control District Board.

I have always been able to rely on Bob during my years in Sacramento and in our Nation's capital. He is a warm, receptive man, and my respect for him as a public servant is immense. Together, the members of the board of supervisors provide a positive government for the county of San Bernardino. It has been both an honor and a privilege to work with the board, and especially Bob Townsend, in providing effective representation to the citizens of San Bernardino County.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and my colleagues here in the House of Representatives, to join with me, family, and friends in wishing Supervisor Bob Townsend a healthy happy retirement. We'll miss you, Bob.

SUPPORT FOR A STRONG SYNTHETIC FUELS PROGRAM

HON. KEN KRAMER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. KRAMER. Mr. Speaker, I have long been a supporter of a strong synthetic fuels program. During my first term in Congress, I was honored to be the only Republican Representative from the Rocky Mountain States asked to serve on the joint House-Senate Energy Committee, which developed the legislation that set up the Synthetic Fuels Corporation.

Following a commitment from the Federal Government, western Colorado invested substantial time and money in an infrastructure which would support the needs of the Union and Cathedrahl Bluffs oil shale projects.

Last month, the Government broke its promise to these Coloradans.

I would like to share with you an article from the Dallas Morning News which accurately reflects my sentiment in support of synthetic fuels and the hard work of the SFC Chairman Ed Noble. I ask that this information be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

[From the Dallas Morning News, Jan. 15, 1986]

SYNTHETIC FUELS ENDEAVOR LEAVES UNDETERMINED LEGACY

(By Jim Landers)

WASHINGTON.—Like a great elephant repeatedly wounded by hunters, Synthetic Fuel Corp. stayed on its feet for a long time before a final javelin blow from Congress last month brought it down.

The corporation was born in the 1980 Iranian oil crisis and killed five years later by a Congress more worried by budget deficits than oil imports. It may take another five years to discover how much of a contribution the corporation made to the country's energy security by backing four projects with about $1.5 billion in federal funds, because that contribution is dependent on the future course of oil prices.

If oil prices keep falling, the synthetic fuels campaign of the 1980s will seem like a waste of taxpayer money. The Reagan administration under the urging of Energy Secretary James Herrington, adopted this view at a December Cabinet meeting.

"The administration no longer believes continued funding of the Synthetic Fuels Corp. serves any useful purpose," Budget Director James Miller wrote Congress on Dec. 12. The letter doomed the efforts of some senators to keep the corporation alive.

If oil prices soar, then the four projects backed by the corporation could provide energy companies with a quick means of developing plants that turn coal and shale into oil and gas. Project sponsors and the outgoing directors of the corporation have taken this view and expect the country's gratitude will be apparent in another 10 years.

Together, the four projects backed by the corporation are designed to add the equivalent of 22,000 barrels a day of oil production (current domestic projection is 8.9 million barrels a day) to the nation's energy base.

The corporation spent far less money and backed far fewer projects than its supporters envisioned. Six years ago, Congress and the Carter administration talked of an $88 billion synthetic fuels effort. About $19 billion actually was appropriated by Congress, and the corporation was given $15.3 billion of that.

Synthetic Fuels Corp. chairman Edward Noble acknowledged that falling prices undermined the corporation, particularly the initial congressional mandate to finance 500,000 barrels per day of synthetic fuels production by 1987 and 2 million barrels per day by 1992.

But Noble said the corporation was able to provide the country with a "national security insurance policy" by fostering synthetic fuels technologies.

One of those technologies is coal gasification. When Synthetic Fuels Corp. was started, gas derived from coal was attractive because of pessimism about U.S. natural gas reserves. Now that the pessimism about gas reserves has dissipated, the technology used in coal gasification is being viewed as a possible solution for acid rain.

And after Congress and the Reagan administration last month decided the federal government had no business spending billions of dollars on synthetic fuels, a top presidential adviser last week recommended a $5 billion, five-year federal effort to develop technologies to reduce acid rain that have many similarities to the synthetic fuels effort.

Former Transportation Secretary Drew Lewis, President Reagan's special representative on acid rain, made the recommendation on Jan. 9 at the conclusion of a yearlong U.S.-Canadian study of the problem.

Two of the four projects funded by Synthetic Fuels Corp. are designed to transform coal into energy-rich gas that can be burned with a fraction of the air pollution generated by coal-fired boilers.

Dow Chemical Co. in Louisiana and a collection of firms in California led by Southern California Edison Co. received $740 million in Synthetic Fuels Corp. price guarantees for two coal gasification projects. The Dow Syngas project is expected to start operation in 1987, while Southern California Edison's Cool Water project has been turning coal into gas—and then gas into electricity—for 18 months.

"Cool Water is demonstrating the cleanest way yet devised for burning coal," Noble said. Several utilities have approached the Cool Water consortium about licensing their technology for other plants, he noted.

In the bill that killed Synthetic Fuels Corp., Congress saved $400 million for clean coal technologies development by the Energy Department while eliminating nearly $7 billion in spending authority.

"We got about two-thirds of the job done." Noble said. "We still lack projects to show us how to use Eastern coals and tar sands, and we could have done more on shale oil. If we'd had those other two or three plants, we could have added all our coal and oil shale to the nation's petroleum reserves—five times the oil reserves of the Middle East. As it is, we should be able to add two or three times all the reserves in the Middle East."

John Howard, President of Greenwich Oil Co. of Dallas, said the $60 million in loan and price guarantees awarded to his company by Synthetic Fuels Corp. in September could add 10 billion barrels of thick, tarry oil to the nation's useful oil reserves.

Greenwich Oil injects oxygen into a deep, sandy oil formation in Wood County, Texas, to produce an underground "fire flood" that makes the oil fluid enough to pump to the surface. The company hopes to produce about 1,600 barrels a day of useful crude oil extracted with fire flooding.

Synthetic Fuels Corp. agreed to guarantee Greenwich $40 per barrel for the first half million barrels of oil lifted from the field by fire flooding. The price guarantee is $22 per barrel more than the current market price for such heavy oil. But withoug the financial assistance, Howard said, Greenwich's Forest Hill heavy oil project probably would limp along for several years, waiting for prices to rise, without ever demonstrating the commercial feasibility of fire flooding.

"I believe the day will come in the not-too-distant future when we'll be back in a similar situation to what we went through in the 1970s and 1980," Howard said. "By 1990 or so, the United States once again will find itself a massive importer of crude oil, vulnerable to offshore disruptions. Our technology will be available then to anybody who wants it."

Noble and Cantrell Exploration Co., a Dallas oil firm competing with Greenwich for heavy oil development, wrote Synthetic Fuels Corp. objecting to the Greenwich's use of federal finances, but Howard called Forest Hill "the best project ever brought to the Synthetic Fuels Corp."

"This is an insurance policy and nothing else," Noble said. "If we don't need it, we didn't spend that much money on it."

NATIONAL READING IS FUN WEEK

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I was pleased yesterday to introduce a joint resolution designating the week of April 20 as "National Reading Is Fun Week." It is my hope that enactment of this resolution will call attention to the problems of illiteracy in our Nation while at the same time pointing out to America that reading is fun.

Mr. Speaker, 1986 marks the 20th anniversary of the founding of Reading is Fundamental, popularly known as RIF, a nationwide, nonprofit program which successfully motivates millions of children and young adults to read. RIF works for a literate America while preventing illiteracy—a problem that affects far too many of our citizens. As a nation, we all pay the price of illiteracy.

It is difficult to determine the exact number of Americans who are illiterate—a problem made more difficult because of the lack of a precise definition of the word. Generally, literacy studies use two definitions: functional illiteracy and the conventional definition. Functional illiteracy is generally used to describe persons who are incapable of understanding written instructions necessary to accomplish specific tasks or functions needed to lead a productive life. In the early 1970's, the University of Texas studied reading and writing competencies that were related to adult economic and educational success in contemporary American society. This adult performance level [APL] study estimated that 20 percent of Americans function as below a marginal level.

Other literacy studies—often conducted by the Census Bureau—have used a standard of conventional literacy: Individuals aged 14 years or over who are unable to read and write English at all. In 1985, the Census Bureau published an estimate of adult illiteracy for 1980, showing a rate of 0.5 percent.

Regardless of what studies are used, our Nation has made great strides to improve literacy in America. In 1870, the illiteracy rate using the conventional definition was 20 percent. As noted, it is now just 0.5 percent. Still, more needs to be done, and public-private partnerships can fill that role.

As the senior Republican on the House Appropriations Committee and its Subcommittee on Labor/Health and Human Services/Education, I worked to insure a funding level of $102 million for the Adult Education Act [AEA] for fiscal year 1986. The AEA is currently the major Federal program that provides basic education and literacy skills for adults. In addition, the subcommittee provided $5 million for library literacy programs—a new program never before funded.

Reading is Fundamental, is an outstanding example of private initiatives to combat illiteracy. The organization reaches young people early, helping them to become readers. In the last 20 years, RIF has brought more than 70 million books into American homes, opening up a world of reading to millions of children.

Mr. Speaker, reading is fun, and I am pleased to introduce this joint resolution commemorating Reading Is Fun Week, April 20 to 26, 1986. During this week, most of RIF's 100,000 volunteers, in every State in the Nation, will reach young people with activities to motivate reading and the opportunity to choose and keep books that speak to their interests and their dreams. I urge my colleagues to cosponsor this resolution.

THE ABORTION DEBATE

HON. DENNY SMITH

OF OREGON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. DENNY SMITH. Mr. Speaker, January 22, 1986, marked the 13th anniversary of the Supreme Court decisions legalizing abortion-on-demand in the United States. In solemn observance of these decisions, tens of thousands of concerned citizens gathered in Washington, DC, to express their support for the right to life for all in our Nation. Many of the marchers came great distances at their own expense, and should be commended for their dedication.

I would like to take this opportunity to express my opposition to abortion.

In 1973, the Supreme Court went far beyond its constitutional role of judicial review, and began establishing—in effect legislating—the Government's policy on abortion. The controversial Supreme Court decisions, Roe versus Wade and Doe versus Bolton, overturned antiabortion statutes in all 50 States. In the 13 years since these decisions, no legislature—State or Federal—has affirmed the right to an abortion.

Many constitutional scholars claim that the Justices first had to find—some say fabricate—the right to privacy in the 14th amendment in order to justify legalized abortion.

I would like to point out some of the obvious flaws in their argument justifying abortion. First, the right of privacy does not extend to all acts committed in private. Parents who abuse their children usually do so in private, but no one would argue that they have a constitutional right to carry out such assaults.

Second, the freedom of choice doesn't apply to all choices made. Someone may choose to rob a bank, but he certainly doesn't have a right to that choice.

The Constitution states that our Government was established, among other reasons, to ensure justice. Therefore, the Government must move to secure and protect the rights of minorities, at times in the face of opposition from the majority. Proabortionists claim that polls show a majority of Americans favor legalized abortion. Without debating the accuracy of these polls, I would like to point out that during other eras in our Nation's history and majority have favored such things as slavery and racial segregation, which we now view as abhorrent.

As a Member of Congress, I have a constitutional obligation to protect the right of life for all Americans, regardless of their age or condition of dependency. I hold this view in light of the overwhelming medical evidence that the fetus is indeed a living human being. After all, the fetus is most assuredly alive, or an abortion wouldn't be necessary to kill it. And if it isn't human, what is it? A dog? A cow?

By resorting to Orwellian double-speak, proabortionists have tried to discredit the humanity of the unborn child. Referring to the unborn as "tissue" or the "products of conception," they hope to hide the fact that abortion involves the taking of another human life.

The 16 million unborn children aborted since 1973 aren't the only victims of abortion, however. Women themselves have been victimized by this multibillion dollar industry. Witness the establishment of groups such as Women Exploited by Abortion [WEBA], an organization whose membership grew by over 10,000 in less than 2 years. All the members are women who have been traumatized as a result of having had an abortion.

The handicapped have also been the Court's victims. In the 1973 decision Roe versus Wade, Justice Blackmun set forth the dangerous "meaningful life" argument. Increased infanticide has been the result. Just as tragic, those who espouse this utilitarian, quality-of-life argument are telling the handicapped, the aged, and the infirm in our society that they are an inconvenience to others and are leading a life not really worth living. We should, instead, uphold the dignity of all individuals in our society.

Abortion is not a women's issue, but an issue of great concern for all Americans. That is why I support efforts to adopt a human life constitutional amendment, to affirm the right to life for all of us.

Unless the right to life is secure for all—born and unborn—it is secure for none. After all, in order to have the unalienable rights of liberty and the pursuit of happiness, one must first have life.

A TRIBUTE TO CARL WALKER

HON. BART GORDON

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. GORDON. Mr. Speaker, I rise to pay tribute to an outstanding public servant, Mr. Carl Walker, who retired on January 3 from the Social Security Administration after nearly 42 years of dedicated service.

Mr. Walker joined the Social Security Administration in 1945 soon after it was established by the Congress and was assigned to its Nashville office. His career as a public servant took him throughout the United States—he served in branch offices in South Carolina, Florida, Alabama, Tennessee, and Georgia. He was always known as the man you could count on to get the job done, whether it was unraveling bureaucratic redtape to get a check for a retired person or reinstating someone's disability pension.

His expertise within the Social Security Administration was well recognized by his superiors and in 1973 he was assigned the task of opening a branch office in Gallatin where he served as its manager until his retirement. Mr. Walker has become a symbol of effective Government service in Gallatin. Many times my staff and I have called upon him for guidance in resolving my constituents' problems.

All of us in Tennessee will miss his guidance, but we wish him and his family many rewarding years ahead. Carl is married to Novice Houchen and they have three children and six grandchildren.

FEDERAL HIGHWAY AID AND MASS TRANSIT AID

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced legislation to oppose a Department of Treasury proposal that would have a catastrophic effect on our Nation's mass transit system. This legislation, House Concurrent Resolution 271, expresses opposition to the Department of Transportation proposal to consolidate Federal highway aid and mass transit aid into a single urban mobility block grant.

Our Nation's public transit system currently serves over 8 billion riders per year in 733 urbanized areas. This transportation system is used by citizens in all 50 States. A consolidation of funding would result in a 40-percent reduction in the approximately $4 billion provided in mass transit aid. A reduction of this magnitude would begin a massive and unavoidable decline in public transit. It is estimated that 15 percent of our mass transit services would experience an immediate shutdown.

I believe this represents a gross injustice to our Nation's communities and many citizens who depend so heavily upon our mass transit system. Mass transit is essential to any effective inter-city and inner-city transportation system and these cuts would severely limit, and in many cases curtail, travel opportunities. In addition, it is important to remember that public transportation provides the most accessibility to the elderly, the disabled, and the young.

A consolidation of funding for Federal highway and mass transit aid would have a debilitating effect on employees and businesses affiliated with our mass transit system. More than 137,600 jobs and $5,056,000,000 in business revenues would be lost as a result of this reduction in funding. It is clear that these proposed cuts would be counterproductive in terms of national economic stability and growth.

While deficit reduction certainly deserves our serious and immediate attention, the two most basic principles that should guide this effort are equity and fairness. Mass transit has already made a substantial contribution—nearly $1 billion directly and $2 billion indirectly since 1981. It is imperative that we maintain and preserve a strong and balanced Federal commitment to public transportation and oppose any efforts to further reduce funding for mass transit. At this time, I wish to insert the full text of my resolution into the RECORD for the benefit of my colleagues. In addition, I wish to call to your attention a recent article that appeared in the New York Times addressing this very issue.

TEXT OF HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 271

To express opposition to the Department of Transportation proposal to consolidate federal highway aid and mass transit aid into a single urban mobility block grant.

Whereas draft legislation proposed by the Department of Transportation would consolidate federal highway aid and mass transit aid into a single urban mobility block grant;

Whereas this consolidation would be accompanied by a 40 percent reduction in the approximately $4 billion provided in mass transit aid;

Whereas mass transit now serves over 8 billion riders per year in 733 urbanized areas in all 50 States;

Whereas a 40 percent reduction in mass transit funding would result in a loss of support for more than 137,600 jobs and $5,056,000,000 in business revenues;

Whereas a 40 percent reduction in public transit funding would result in an unavoidable, catastropic and massive decline which could result in an immediate shutdown of 15% of mass transit services;

Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That the Congress hereby expresses its opposition to this urban mobility block grant proposal and urges that federal highway and mass transit funding remain separate and adequately funded to ensure the continued effectiveness of each program.

REAGAN SEEKS CUT OF 40 PERCENT IN FUNDS FOR MASS TRANSIT

SINGLE GRANT PROPOSED—DRAFT PLAN COMBINES AID FOR ROADS, SUBWAYS AND BUSES BUT TOTAL IS SMALLER

(By Robert Pear)

WASHINGTON, January 4.—Transportation officials say President Reagan, as part of his budget for the fiscal year 1987, will propose combining Federal aid to highways and mass transit in a single grant with reduced funds.

Under the proposal, city and state officials could use the money for highways, subways or buses, depending on local needs, but the total amount of Federal money available for mass transit—$4.1 billion last year—would be reduced by 40 percent or more.

The proposal, which is subject to approval by Congress, is set forth in a "concept paper" and in draft legislation prepared by the Department of Transportation. Administration officials gave additional details in interviews this week, saying the new consolidated grant would be the major source of Federal aid to mass transit. But there would still be other sources of highway funds, probably more than $9 billion, independent of the block grant, the officials added.

PROSPECTS IN CONGRESS

Congress has rebuffed many of President Reagan's earlier efforts to reduce spending for transportation, including his proposal to eliminate Federal operating assistance for local mass transit systems. Congressional aides said Congress was more likely to cut mass transit funds this year, though not as much as Mr. Reagan wanted.

In a recent speech to transit officials, Ralph L. Stanley head of the Federal Urban Mass Transportation Administration, said: "We are proposing an urban mobility block grant that would combine Federal highway and transit capital funds in large urban areas. The funds could be used for any highway or transit capital project."

Capital expenses include the construction, purchase and improvement of transit facilities and equipment such as subway cars, tracks, signal systems, buses and bus depots.

DISTORTIONS AND FIASCOES

Mr. Stanley's deputy, Alfred A. Delli-Bovi, said the current Federal programs "distort the priorities" of local officials, who often design transportation projects simply to get Federal money, not to meet genuine local needs. As a result, he said, "we have had fiascoes such as tunnels to nowhere in New York and People Movers in Detroit."

The long-delayed 63d Street subway tunnel in New York City was to have included a second, lower level for Long Island Rail Road trains, but the project has never been completed because of financial constraints. The People Mover, an elevated transit line under construction in Detroit, faces far higher costs than originally projected.

Officials in New York and other cities said the additional flexibility of a block grant was desirable, but they expressed concern about the possible cuts in funds.

Preliminary Federal calculations show that aid to the New York Metropolitan Transportation Authority, about $550 million this year, would be cut roughly in half under the proposal.

President Reagan's budget for the fiscal year 1987, which begins Oct. 1, is to be sent to Congress early next month. White House officials said the cuts in mass transit assistance were part of a package of $50 billion in savings that must be achieved in 1987 to comply with a new Federal law that seeks to balance the budget by 1991.

Leonard S. Simon, assistant executive director of the United States Conference of Mayors, said mayors "would welcome the additional flexibility, but would be extremely concerned about any major cuts" in Federal support for mass transit.

The Federal Government provided $4.1 billion in aid for mass transit in the last fiscal year, and Congress has appropriated $3.7 billion in the current fiscal year, 1986. In each of the two years, about $1.1 billion comes from the Federal Highway Trust Fund; the rest comes from general revenue.

Administration officials said Mr. Reagan would propose slashing, or perhaps eliminating, the general revenue contribution, which now accounts for 70 percent of all mass transit aid. Some, but not all, of this loss could be made up by switching Federal funds from highway programs to mass transit. That decision would be up to local officials under the block-grant proposal.

IDEAL PLACE TO CUT

Bonnie B. Whyte, a spokesman for the Federal Urban Mass Transportation Administration, said Federal officials regarded mass transit as "an ideal place to cut" because it was "primarily a local function." In addition, she said, the officials believe that mass transit should have "a dedicated source of revenue" earmarked for the purpose.

There is a specific source of revenue for the $1.1 billion in mass transit assistance derived from the Highway Trust Fund. That represents one penny of the 9-cent-a-gallon Federal excise tax on gasoline. But there is no special source of revenue for the other Federal aid to mass transit. The general revenue contribution is more likely to be cut becaue it is not earmarked for transportation, officials said.

Officials at the Transportation Department said Ray A. Barnhart, head of the Federal Highway Administration, had insisted that Federal money for the construction, repair and maintenance of interstate highways be kept out of the new block grant. Such highways have long been a concern of the Federal Government because of their role in interstate commerce and national defense.

Federal aid for highways totals $12.8 billion this year. Of this, Congress has authorized $4 billion for construction and $3.1 billion for resurfacing and major repairs on interstate highways.

Originally, in the proposal submitted to the Office of Management and Budget by Transportation Secretary Elizabeth Hanford Dole, only a portion of Federal mass transit money was to be merged into the block grant. But budget officials said they had decided to pare Federal aid to mass transit and put most of the remaining funds into the block grant.

The block grant account, they said, would consist of roughly $1.1 billion in mass transit money and $1 billion to $2 billion in highway money. The exact amounts have not yet been determined.

A document prepared for submission to Congress with the President's budget says: "The Administration believes that urban mobility issues should be addressed at the local level, and that local officials should determine whether to make highway or transit investments based on local transportation needs rather than the source of Federal funds."

ROSEMONT, ILLINOIS' 30TH BIRTHDAY

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, on Monday, January 20, 1986, the village of Rosemont, IL, officially observed 30 years of incorporation as a village: three decades of phenomenal growth and progress that has helped Illinois become an important center of business and tourism.

The village of Rosemont is a textbook example of a spirited community working together to create a town run like our country's most successful businesses: efficient operation, steady growth, team effort toward clearly delineated goals.

Rosemont's wide variety of operations run efficiently and profitably because of the total involvement of village residents. Through the years, each resident has contributed his or her own time and talents to the continued progress of the village.

We salute Mayor Donald E. Stephens and the people of village hall: Trustees Lorraine Clemmensen, Anthony D. Esposito, Hubert Langer, Emmett Michaels, Steven Minale, and Leslie Scott, and Village Clerk Irene Kolaski. Other dedicated personnel at Rosemont Village Hall include Deputy Mayor Donald E. Stephens II, Finance Officer Ray Gold, Deputy Clerk Frances Stevens, Finance Clerk Lee Doberton, Purchasing Coordinator August Sansone, Health and License Officer Joe Rizzo, Executive Secretary Gail Stephens, Clerk Rosalie Lennstrom and Receptionist Isabelle Seib.

At Rosemont/O'Hare Exposition Center, Managing Director James Freeman and Peter Lombardi, executve director of the Rosemont/O'Hare Convention Bureau, bring important, income-producing trade shows to Rosemont. With the help of Jeff Mahnke of Rosemont Catering Services, and David Houston, president/general manager of Rosemont Exposition Services, exposition managers and business travelers receive top-drawer attention.

Rosemont's Public Safety Department helps maintain order and safety for the 18,000 business people and tourists who visit Rosemont each day. Jack Hasselberger, director and chief of patrol; Gary Hopkins, deputy director and fire chief,; and Mel Ramones, captain in charge of special services, coordinate these efforts. Tom Clinger, captain in charge of patrol division and Lt. Roy Evans of the services division, lend their talents. Rosemont's considerable traffic and crowds are controlled by the Rosemont Public Safety Auxiliary Department, under Lt. Jack Green. Vito Corriero directs a public works department that keeps Rosemont streets clean and clear for visitors.

In serving its visitors, Rosemont does not forget its residents. Rosemont is a town that reveres its senior citizens and school children. Residents enjoy a park district that provides activities for young and old throughout the year, under the leadership of Robert Thompson and Robert Koehler. Dr. Frank Tavano, superintendent of Rosemont Elementary School, heads a staff of dedicated professionals who provide Rosemont school children with the tools for tomorrow.

But Rosemont refuses to sit on its laurels. Not content with already outstanding accomplishments in business, tourism and civics, the village of Rosemont presses on in realizing the potential of this tiny parcel of land adjacent to the world's busiest airport, O'Hare International.

Late last year, Mayor Donald Stephens and the Village trustees announced a half-billion dollar, 100-acre redevelopment project for Rosemont.

The program includes 10 major construction projects scheduled for completion in 1987. Among these projects are nine office buildings—comprising 9 million square feet—four world-class hotels; a unique 7,000 linear-foot Skybridge System, which will be the first of its kind in the Nation to connect a major exposition center with fine hotels and parking facilities; a performing arts theater; a 4,458-car parking garage; a new church; a new 12,000 square-foot firestation; and a 100,000 square-foot addition to the Rosemont/O'Hare Exposition Center. This addition will bring the Expo Center's total square footage to 450,000 square-feet on two levels, making the center the 11th largest exposition facility in the Nation.

This construction further solidifies Rosemont's position as the premier location for business, meetings and conventions, and travel. Rosemont already is home to nine of the world's most prestigious hotels; the Rosemont Horizon, a 19,000-seat sports, music and entertainment venue; the spacious Rosemont/O'Hare Exposition Center; and the versatile meeting facility, the Rosemont/O'Hare Conference Center.

Mr. Speaker, it is not often that we can point to a communitiy so alive with dreams and the vitality to reach them. We commend Mayor Donald E. Stephens and the residents of Rosemont. Their self-sufficiency and creativity is a symbol of America at its most industrious. We of the House of Representatives congratulate Rosemont for 30 years of success, and we wish them a bright future.

NICHOLAS JOHN LOUNTZIS

HON. GUS YATRON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. YATRON. Mr. Speaker, it is my great honor today to recognize the outstanding accomplishments of my good friend, Mr. Nicholas John Lountzis. Nick, best known in the Reading, PA, area, as owner of Nick's Chat-a-While Inn, will be celebrating his 92d birthday on February 17, 1986. Nick's accomplishments form a real-life Horatio Alger "rags-to-riches" story and his success personifies the American dream for countless immigrants who have become a part of our great Nation.

Nick was born in Vousdre, Greece. He spent his early years as a shepherd, and at the age of 17, he emigrated to the United States with $25 in his pocket and knowing only one word of English—"Boston." He spent the next few years working in several businesses in Boston, Maine, Detroit, and Chicago. In 1918, Nick joined the infantry, nearly arriving in France for the armistice. He was stationed in Texas where he earned the rank of corporal.

The early 1920's were a time of hardship for Nick, but, through much dedicated hard work and perseverance, he was able to get back on his feet and eventually bought a luncheonette—the Alps—in New York City. After several years in New York, he returned to Chicago where he met his future wife, Anna Allushuski, a coal miner's daughter from Girardville, PA. They married in 1930 and had a son, Nicholas, Jr., in 1932. Nick and his family came to Reading, PA, in 1934 and permanently settled in the area.

Nick started out in Reading at the historic Crystal Restaurant where he was a highly acclaimed and popular mixmaster. At this time, Nick and Anna were blessed with the birth of their second son, William. Nick was instrumental in many innovations which helped make the Crystal into Reading's most popular restaurant. After years of success at the Crystal, he was ready to operate his own establishment and purchased the Chat-a-While Inn on February 17, 1947—his wedding anniversary. His past achievements were repeated at the Chat-a-While as it became established as one of the finest restaurants in the area. Nick used his entrepreneurial skill to help set up two other restaurants—the Riveredge and the Valley Inn. He still greets guests at the Chat-a-While with the congeniality and friendliness for which he has been known for years. His two sons and grandson have continued this fine tradition.

In addition to his business activities, Nick has been involved in a number of community organizations. He has arranged for more than a half-dozen family members and friends to come to the United States from Greece. He also remains active in St. Matthew's Greek Orthodox Church where he has served a 5-year term as president. Nick has also served as treasurer of AHEPA and has been involved with the Masonic Blue Lodge, the Shriners, the American Legion, the National Restaurant Association and the Greek Democratic Club.

Nick's career forms a shining example of what can be accomplished in this Nation through hard work, dedication and perseverance. Nick Lountzis has made a significant contribution to this country and the Reading area and has brought countless joy into the lives of his family and his many friends and admirers. For my own part, I feel honored to count Nick as a friend and it gives me great pleasure to recognize him on this occasion. I know that my colleagues will join me in wishing Nick Lountzis a very happy 92d birthday and continued success in the years to come.

H.R. 4057 WILL REACTIVATE COLA'S

HON. ROBERT W. DAVIS

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. DAVIS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced a bill to correct an injustice. Is it fair that not all senior citizens will receive their COLA's this year? In the push to pass Gramm-Rudman, many Members may not have realized that all COLA's for senior citizens were not protected. Sure we granted the COLA for veterans and for Social Security recipients, but there is a significant population of senior citizens who will not get a COLA—yet their incomes are just as fixed.

As you know, Federal retirees, military retirees, and a number of other groups lost their 1986 COLA under Gramm-Rudman. H.R. 4057 would restore those COLA's without jeopardizing the effort to meet Gramm-Rudman deficit reduction targets.

The key word in the title is "fairness." Congress has decided that Social Security and veterans compensation programs should receive COLAS's. These other retirement programs should too. One Federal retiree who recently wrote me put it best, "I am a senior citizen, too."

While I have just begun the process of briefing the appropriate organizations on this legislation, I am pleased to report that the initial response has been good. Already two groups—the Non-Commissioned Officers Association and the Association for Retirement Equity—have lent their support, and I expect many more will follow in the days ahead.

Reinstating the COLA's to all of the below mentioned retirement programs will cost $994 million. To insure revenue neutrality, each agency or department will be asked to absorb a proportional share of the $994 million. That share will be determined by the size of the agency's budget in relation to the total Federal budget. Each agency will have the discretion to make its own internal reductions. Estimates of two agency shares are $4 million for the Department of State and $145,000 for the FCC. These examples show that each agency will not have an unreasonable share to absorb.

The following retirement programs would receive COLA's—retroactive to January 1—with this legislation:

(1) Civil service retirement and disability fund.
(2) Military retirement fund.
(3) Coast Guard retirement pay.
(4) Railroad retirement (Tier II).
(5) Comptroller General retirement system.
(6) NOAA retirement.
(7) CIA retirement and disability fund.
(8) Retirement pay for commissioned PHS officers.
(9) Foreign Service retirement and disability fund.
(10) Special benefits, FECA.

Certainly some would argue for a permanent change to avoid fighting the COLA battle every year. However, in light of current fall out over Gramm-Rudman, it is unlikely that Congress would agree to a permanent guarantee of these COLA's. I see this 1-year change as a compromise that will buy time to negotiate a long-term solution to this inequity.

I urge my colleagues to join me in correcting this injustice by cosponsoring H.R. 4057.

SKIP SHINES FOR GUAM

HON. BEN GARRIDO BLAZ

OF GUAM

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. BLAZ. Mr. Speaker, a large part of our effort here is to inform and enlighten our colleagues and the public about the communities we represent. I am pleased to report I recently had spirited help with that responsibility from a group of young ambassadors of goodwill.

A group of talented children from the territory of Guam made a national tour in December to help better acquaint our fellow Americans on the mainland with the people and culture of our community and the role we play in the American family. Led by Mrs. Teri Lee Knapp, the organization—the Sunshine Kids in Production [SKIP]—presented several shows, culminating with a performance at the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts during the Christmas holidays.

SKIP is an experienced and entertaining troupe of singers, dancers, actors, and actresses, made up of about 20 children, ranging in age from 5 to 14. The youngsters have been performing for several years and have made a significant contribution through charity performances within the territory as well as educational and artistic exchanges outside Guam.

Their performance at the Holiday Festival, a special Christmas presentation composed of groups from around the Nation, capped a very successful tour across the Nation. They provided Washington and audiences across the country with an entertaining introduction to Guam.

I was pleased to be able to provide a tour of the Capitol for SKIP and cohost with the Guam Society a reception for the group which was well attended by members of the Guam community and their friends in the Washington area.

The children, their sponsors and leaders should be commended for their fine effort in behalf of Guam. Through their dance and song, they conducted their own version of the People-to-People Program in a truly enjoyable and meaningful way.

COMMEMORATION OF THE COMMUNITY BROTHERHOOD AWARDS BANQUET DAY

HON. DOUGLAS APPLEGATE

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. APPLEGATE. Mr. Speaker, I am privileged today to bring to the attention of my esteemed colleagues in the Congress the First Annual Community Brotherhood Awards Banquet Day, which will take place on February 22, 1986, and will be hosted by the Quinn Memorial A.M.E. Church in Steubenville, OH. Since 1926, Brotherhood has been a traditional theme of the month of February and February 22, 1986 has been proclaimed as Brotherhood Day by Mayor Dave Hinderman of Steubenville, OH and by Mayor Frank Laymen of Winterville, OH.

This ecumenical celebration is being organized with the cooperation of all church denominations and is supported by the Inter Faith Ministerial Alliance to promote the idea of service to the community and to humanity. The banquet will recognize people who have made significant contributions in public, civic, and religious affairs and who have worked in some way toward better relations in their community. Five awards will be given to those people who have demonstrated brotherhood in a service area in their respective fields. By looking at these outstanding individuals as models to aspire to, the community can reflect upon the goals and objectives of brotherhood in their everyday living.

Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to have this opportunity to express my support of the Quinn Memorial First Annual Community Brotherhood Awards Banquet, honoring the spirit, importance, and significance of brotherhood and to congratulate those exemplary individuals who have helped their community grow in a meaningful way. It takes committed community members, such as those who will receive awards at the banquet, to serve as examples of how we can work toward a more perfect and peaceful society.

THE WORLD CHAMPION CHICAGO BEARS

HON. CHARLES A. HAYES

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. HAYES. Mr. Speaker, after the most lopsided victory in Super Bowl history, there is no doubt about who is No. 1. The Chicago Bears are now the undisputed football champions of the world. But the way in which the Bears won this championship should not be misunderstood. By winning 18 games with just 1 loss, they have tied for the most victories ever by an NFL team. Along the way, they created a video and a song, "The Super Bowl Shuffle," which is helping to raise thousands of dollars for the homeless and the hungry in the great city of Chicago. They have created great, memorable entertainment for millions around the world. They have put together a defensive team that should make the Pentagon take notice—no hammers for $435 or toilet seats for $554—just good, solid defense. And what a team. Not a team of superstars, but a team of characters that the entire city can identify with; from the irrascible Jim McMahon to the immovable William "The Refrigerator" Perry; from Yale graduate Gary Fencik to Walter Payton "Sweetness" himself, the NFL's all-time leading running back.

Among all of the hoopla and victory celebrations, one of the moments that stood out most in my mind was watching the interview with Richard Dent immediately after the game. When the Super Bowl MVP was asked about his view of why the Bears did so well, he replied that he himself was especially inspired. "You know, Dr. King's Birthday was last week." he said. "That was pretty special to me."

Of course, Dr. King did not dream about Super Bowl championships for Chicago. But he did dream about results like those which the Super Bowl has produced. People all over the city of Chicago, from the northside to the southside, from the lakefront to the westside, from suburbia to the central city, all Chicagoans are proud of what the Bears have done, for themselves, and for their city.

PERHAPS KIDS MEETING KIDS CAN MAKE A DIFFERENCE

HON. TED WEISS

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to the attention of my colleagues an organization called Perhaps Kids Meeting Kids Can Make a Difference. Cofounded in 1982 by Mary and Marvin Sochet, residents of the 17th Congressional District of New York, which I am priviledged to represent, Kids Meeting Kids seeks to cut through international tensions by developing friendship between American and Soviet children.

President Reagan's recent summit meeting in Geneva was deemed a success for its significant proposals for increased people-to-people contact between United States and U.S.S.R. During the last 3 years Kids Meeting Kids has been progressing quite successfully toward that very same goal.

Through Kids Meeting Kids, Mary and Marvin Sochet have organized correspondence between more than 40,000 American and 40,000 Soviet children. They also sponsored a "summit conference" held on December 11, 1985 by eight American and eight Soviet kids ages 7 to 14. The conference was one of the first unhindered exchanges between United States and Soviet children in the United States.

As their next project, the Sochets are organizing the first summer-camp exchanges of young students between the two countries. The summertime exchanges are to be followed by school-year exchanges. The goal of Kids Meeting Kids is to organize the exchange of 250,000 American children in the U.S.S.R. and the same number in our country throughout the entire year.

I believe that the presence of thousands of children can help to reduce the suspicions and mistrust that have let us to acquire mountains of strategic weapons. The organized exchange of letters and the recent kids "summit conference" remind us that American youngsters and their Soviet counterparts recognize the urgency of achieving world peace. A summer exchange program would seem to be the logical extensions of their efforts.

I commend Mary and Marvin Sochet for their leadership in Kids Meeting Kids and applaud their efforts to further friendship and peace between the United States and the Soviet Union.

A TRIBUTE TO MAYOR MARGE BOON OF GRAND HAVEN

HON. GUY VANDER JAGT

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. VANDER JAGT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask you and our distinguished colleagues to join me in saluting a remarkable woman, an outstanding community leader and a dear, personal friend, Mayor Marge Boon of Grand Haven.

The Muskegon Sunday Chronicle recently ran a feature article on Mayor Boon's contributions and her efforts to make life better for all the people of Grand Haven. I'm not at all surprised by this recognition as Marge Boon deserves the praise that this article affords her for her exemplary record of exceptional accomplishments in public service. I am grateful for the opportunity to commend this article to my colleague's attention.

[From the Sunday Chronicle, Dec. 29, 1985]

SHE'S A BOON—NOT EVERYONE AGREES WITH HER, BUT SHE IS THE MAYOR OF GRAND HAVEN

(By Susan E. Harrison)

She is a woman in power.

That alone makes her subject to stereotype.

She also is first in her field.

Add that to the power she wields, and the combination assures her of public scrutiny at every turn.

And brings up the subject of double standards.

A woman doing a man's job: Can she be judged on her own merit?

Then there is the issue of her personality.

This woman is strong, aggressive, competent, straightforward.

Or should that be hard, brash, brusque and pushy?

The description depends on the day, and the crowd.

Like many "firsts," Majorie A. Boon, has discovered the barometer that measures her public personality and political career is not always the same as the one used to assess her male counterparts.

But such discrepancies come with the territory of being the first woman mayor in the city of Grand Haven's 151-year history.

It is not easy ground to break.

If Mrs. Boon were a man doing the things she does, making the public impression she does, would she be described as brash? Or pushy?

"My answer is going to be no," says city manager Larry Deetjen.

Or are those words only used to describe women in power?

And are they shaded with negative implications?

"I think we are over the issue of gender," Deetjen says, "even in Grand Haven."

But Mrs. Boon, the woman who has hurdled political barriers and erased gender gaps in Grand Haven since the year 1970, knows all too well the trials of being the first woman in one of the last bastions of male dominance.

"Honey," she says, "I know how Jackie Robinson felt."

The list of credits behind Marge Boon's name goes on forever.

First woman appointed to Grand Haven's planning commission in 1970.

First woman elected to Grand Haven City Council in '71.

First woman to run for mayor of Grand Haven, in '79 (she was defeated).

First woman elected as mayor of Grand Haven in '81.

And that's just for starters.

In 1983, she ran unopposed for the mayor's office.

In September 1985, she was elected president of Michigan Municipal League—an organization representing the city managers, clerks, mayors, attorneys and staffs of 500 Michigan cities.

Mrs. Boon is only the second woman in the league's 90-year history to hold the position.

"I think they're finally seeing that I'm serious," Mrs. Boon says. "Today, I can call people up and have them believe what I'm saying. Is that power? I don't know. I do know it's respect."

But when the votes were tallied in Grand Haven on election night—Nov. 5, 1985—Mrs. Boon escaped defeat by only 126 votes over her opponent James Cook.

"When you've got a strong candidate who moves fast and gets things done, it's always easy for an opponent to criticize and be negative," says Deetjen. "When you take a stand, you're going to get more opposition. It's the name of the game."

At issue during the campaign, according to Cook, were a "communications" imbalance between city hall and city council—and a too-optimistic view of the last few years' economic recovery in Grand Haven.

Mrs. Boon doesn't talk much—as a matter of public record, at least—about her near-defeat in November.

She does, however, continue to sound the call for teamwork: a favorite rallying cry of hers during the election and throughout her term of office.

"I don't like arguments (among city council members), especially in public meetings," says Mrs. Boon "I don't want anybody badmouthing anybody."

It is the council's job to "set policy," she says, not to "interfere with the administration of the city.

"It's so important for the council and city manager to work as a team and to move in one direction," she says.

The 55-year-old Mrs. Boon learned the value of teamwork—and a tight adherence to protocol—as a member of the Tri-Cities League of Women Voters long before she entered the political arena.

"The League was an outlet for my energies when I was diapering and taking care of my children, " she says.

Those children—Cristine, Dennis and Amy—are all in their 20s now; and off on careers of their own, leaving their mother free to work in politics and their father, Maurice, extra time to give his job as a sixth-grade teacher in Grand Haven school system.

Mrs. Boon started her career as a science teacher in Grand Haven, right after graduation from Hope College. She married at age 26.

"In those days, you were basically told they'd see you after your last kid was out of high school," she says.

So Mrs. Boon settled down to the job of raising kids, and she joined the League of Women Voters.

It was the League, all those years ago, that taught her the most basic of rules that she's taken into politics—study the problem long and hard before speaking publicly.

"It's going to sound so trite, you know what they say about women: 'She does her homework,' I could kill "em, wring men's necks when they say that," says Mrs. Boon. "But the League teaches you don't speak up until you know."

It was because of the League, indirectly, that she entered politics. In 1970, when Grand Haven City Council members cast about for new planning commissioners, they remembered the name of League member Marge Boon. The League—and Mrs. Boon—had impressed council members with their studies and programs.

Until then, Mrs. Boon and politics had been separate entities.

Having grown up in Grand Rapids, Mrs. Boon was breaking new ground in college during the 1950s as a woman majoring in sciences.

She always had been on the edge of tradition, she says—taller than most women at 5-feet, 9-inches; a female science teacher in the 1950s; married at 26—comparatively late, at the time; Grand Haven's first woman mayor even though she's not active in party-line politics, and even though she didn't have training in politics early on.

Mrs. Boon credits the league as the first place that taught her to be a team player.

"That was something women in my age group did not learn how to do. We did not have the arena for that process of learning," She says.

The spirit of teamwork is something she insists on projecting, even though she is the one most usually in the public spotlight—not the other council members or city staff.

"Very honestly, it's been wonderful, but I'm saying it's not just the mayor; it's the whole team—the council and the administration that does everything to get you successful," Mrs. Boon says.

Her focus since Day One of her administration, and the issue that has garnered her the greatest publicity, has been on economic recovery.

When she became mayor in 1981, Grand Haven had lost two of its biggest employers: Cooper Industries and Oldberg Manufacturing.

"And Eagle-Ottawa was very edgy," she says, "and we almost lost Bastian-Blessing."

Her Honor, the Mayor, took matters into her own hands.

"We came down on them like thunder to stay here," she says. "As the mayor, I had to step forward and let those people know we care about them and that we wanted them to stay in Grand Haven."

With that single move—taking the initiative, although there was no precedent for city politicians to call on industry—Mrs. Boon became one of Grand Haven's most public mayors.

"It was just a thrilling experience, no, that's too femmy of a word," she says, stopping herself. "It was a super experience to go into these factories and see what pride these blue collar workers have in their jobs."

Jobs—and more jobs—always have been Mrs. Boon's political focus.

"The council told Larry (Deetjen) that we'd back him up, we'd do anything he wants, as long as he's creating jobs," she says.

When she took office, Mrs. Boon says, Grand Haven had lost about 900 jobs with the closing of Cooper and Oldberg. Since that time, she says, 900-plus new industrial jobs and 400 new commercial and office jobs have been created.

But Mrs. Boon was criticized during the '85 election by opponents who asked for proof of that many jobs—and they questioned how well-paying the replacements are in comparison to the old ones.

"I'm sick and tired, dammit, of hearing how do I know we have this many new jobs," Mrs. Boon responds. "I went out and counted them."

Grand Haven's industry is more "diversified," she says, than it was in 1981—with new companies springing up, new companies that might have to start at a lower wage base than the older ones.

"Very honestly, it's none of my business what a CEO pays his people," she says.

The statement is typical Marge Boon.

"Look, I can't make things happen on my own," she says. "I can call people. I can work hard. I can talk to people, but that's all."

She lets the mistake slip by once.

But she can't let it go a second time.

"May I correct the city clerk?" Mayor Boon asks mid-meeting.

All eyes turn toward the mayor.

Grand Haven City Council chambers are sparsely populated this evening, just two days before Christmas. The agenda is short and until now, the meeting has moved rather quickly, spurred on by holiday obligations and good cheer.

The meeting grinds to a halt.

Mrs. Boon turns to city clerk Lynne Oleszczuk who has twice called the roll call vote incorrectly.

"The mayor always votes last," advises Mrs. Boon.

The city clerk takes notice.

The roll call continues.

This time, Mrs. Boon's name is last.

As mayor, Marge Boon not only sits at the center of things at the council table; she is the center of Grand Haven council politics.

She runs a tight ship, allowing little room for inefficiency in the running of meetings, putting up with no slips of protocol in city business.

"I've sat too long at meetings that are run ineffectively," she says, "where they've lost their audience and the reason for them being there. We don't want that in Grand Haven."

That is Marge Boon, mayor behind the scenes.

But she doesn't stay there long.

Mrs. Boon keeps a high profile.

During her administration, she has played host to former President Gerald Ford during his 1984 visit to Grand Haven. She christened the Coast Guard Cutter Escanaba in Middletown, R.I., in August.

And just last week, she waited for—but was eventually stood up by—Vice President George Bush, who was to inspect the Grand Haven shoreline eaten away by erosion.

Her highly visible approach to the mayor's position—both on a local and state level—has earned her both criticism and compliments from her constituents.

But whether supporter or detractor of this mayor named Marge Boon, the people of Grand Haven know who she is.

"She was an outsider to the network when she came into politics, and that made it more difficult," says Deetjen. "She's had to be aggressive. And yet, she is also very personable, warm and loves her family. She is playing a role here in City Hall, just as I am. Here, I'm aggressive, but I also have a family and am human."

Since taking office, however, Mrs. Boon's public image—and personality—have become as much an issue in Grand Haven as her accomplishments in office.

"The thing I like least is being misunderstood," says Mrs. Boon. "My hide is not tough enough. I'm still a 'wuss' inside."

When she reads her political gaffes quoted on the front page of newspapers throughout western Michigan, or finds herself at odds with reporters or council members, she says "she dies a thousands deaths."

"I think: I've done it again," Mrs. Boon says. "I sound so hard and, and—so strong."

Her public image is a complex, intricate combination of events and personality quirks—which onlookers discover can be a contradiction in terms.

Her private side presumably is just as complicated.

She is a mayor who makes "whistlestop" visits to grocery stores to check out the public's mood because she doesn't "have time to coffee klatsch," a mayor whose language can be earthy in private conversation, a mayor who still has lunch ready for a grown son and his wife most workdays because they are coming to the family home at noon.

She is a many-faceted public official.

On the one hand, it was Mrs. Boon's idea to give gifts to the families of the men serving on the Grand Haven-based Coast Guard cutter U.S.S. Acacia—in Sturgeon Bay, Wis., for repairs at Thanksgiving—because the men would not be home.

"We needed to do something for them to let them know we cared," she says.

On the other hand, when asked a question she doesn't like, she'll visibly bristle.

"Tell me," she challenges, "Why would you ask?"

And the conversation ends before it even begins.

She believes in being in control during council meetings as well as in private conversations. She has no tolerance for the games people sometimes have had to play.

"I'm old enough to be able to say, 'Hey, I don't need that tradition,' " Mrs. Boon says. "I am 55 years old. If I'm ever going to arrive, it's now."

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, JR.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, I was absent from the floor of the House of Representatives on January 23, 1986, as I was back in the 23d Congressional District on official business. Had I been present, I would have voted in the following fashion:

Rollcall No. 2: Journal—the House approved the Journal of Wednesday, January 22, "yea";

Rollcall No. 3: H.R. 2443—Expedited Funds Availability, the House agreed to the rule (H. Res. 357) under which the bill was considered, "yea";

Rollcall No. 5: H.R. 2443—Expedited Funds Availability, the House rejected the Wylie amendment that sought to clarify the regulatory responsibility of the Federal Reserve Board to preserve the soundness of and prevent abuses of the payments systems, "noe";

Rollcall No. 6: H.R. 2443—Expedited Funds Availability, the House agreed to the Bartlett amendment, as amended by the Shumway amendment that allows depository institutions to exempt checks from the availability schedules when the institution has reason to doubt the collectability of funds on a check, and provides notification of such action no later than the close of the next business day, "aye";

Rollcall No. 7: H.R. 2443—Expedited Funds Availability, the House rejected the Shumway amendment in the nature of a substitute that sought to replace the temporary and permanent schedules with a requirement that the Federal Reserve Board issue regulations to improve the check clearing and notification systems, "noe"; and

Rollcall No. 8: 2443—Expedited Funds Availability, the House passed the measure to limit the number of days a depository institution may restrict the availability of funds which are deposited in any account, "aye."

NEW CASTLE COACH HONORED

HON. JOE KOLTER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. KOLTER. Mr. Speaker, I rise to ask my colleagues to join with me in recognizing the outstanding service of New Castle Red Hurricane coach Lindy Lauro. Coach Lauro has just completed his 25th year of coaching at New Castle High School in Lawrence County, in my Fourth Congressional District of Pennsylvania.

Coach Lauro, in over a half century, has touched all phases in the world of football from junior high to the professional ranks as a player and coach. In 1961 he became head coach at his alma mater, New Castle High School.

His record at New Castle is 184 wins, 70 losses, and 13 ties. He has led undefeated teams in 1962, 1967, 1970, 1975, and 1984. Under his leadership the Red Hurricanes won three W.P.I.A.L. Championships, in 1967, 1973, and 1975.

Coach Lauro has dedicated his entire adult life to building confidence, character, and sportsmanship in youth of all ages. He is responsible for scores of boys advancing their education though college, who may otherwise have been denied were it not for their football experience.

Lindy Lauro is a fine example of the character of the people of New Castle. His dedication to the community has helped make New Castle a better place to live. And that is why I rise today, to call attention to Coach Lindy Lauro, before the full U.S. House of Representatives.

BEARS SUPERBOWL VICTORY IS AWESOME

HON. JOHN EDWARD PORTER

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. PORTER. Mr. Speaker, picking the Patriots to win Superbowl XX, Mr. Speaker, was akin to picking TIP O'NEILL to win the U.S. Open. The Patriots, a good team, never had a chance against the Chicago Bears, a great team—an awesome team.

The Bears didn't just shuffle, Mr. Speaker, they romped and stomped your Patriots all over the field, holding them to just one first down and negative yardage in the first half. In fact, it was only when the Bears let the first team rest that the Patriots could move the ball at all. If New England quarterback Tony Eason was sick prior to the game, he became terminal after the first 15 minutes. The Bear defense sacked him and his successor, Steve Grogan, a record-tying seven times.

Mr. Speaker, after your prediction that the Patriots would win the Superbowl, all of us on this side of the aisle look forward to your next prediction that you Democrats will pick up seats in this fall's elections!

TRIBUTE TO MARVIN LEWIS

HON. BARBARA BOXER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mrs. BOXER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to a man who has done so much for the people of the San Francisco Bay area, Marvin E. Lewis.

As President of the Bay Area Rapid Transit Commission from 1949 to 1954, Marvin Lewis carried out his duties with such zeal and dedication that he has been bestowed with the title "The Father of BART."

As many of you know, BART, the Bay Area Rapid Transit, has been providing mass transportation to the ever-increasing population of the San Francisco Bay area for close to 10 years. As the "Father of BART," Marvin Lewis has made a substantial contribution to improving the quality of life for many bay area citizens.

The city of San Francisco is honoring Marvin Lewis with a day in his honor on February 6, 1986. Because BART could not have been created without substantial interaction between local and Federal Government, I think it is appropriate that I stand here today in the House of Representatives to salute Marvin Lewis' accomplishments and to thank him for all that he has done for the people of the San Francisco Bay area.

BILL INTRODUCED TO RESTORE COLA'S

HON. STAN PARRIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, many of my colleagues are aware that cost-of-living adjustments for civil service, military, and railroad retirees are once again targeted—this time for elimination—under the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings budget balancing legislation. And while it is still too early to determine what additional cuts will be mandated for retirees by this law over the next 6 years, we already know that one of the first casualties of Gramm-Rudman was the 3.1-percent increase scheduled for 1986.

Although I strongly support a balanced budget, I also support a fair and balanced legislative remedy to our deficit problem. Once again, Government retirees are unfairly singled out for deficit reduction, while other groups are totally exempt. Gramm-Rudman, which claims across-the-board automatic spending cuts, actually spares three-fourths of the Government's programs and leaves retired Federal, military, railroad employees, and a few other groups to absorb the cuts.

In response to this legislative discrimination, I am introducing on behalf of Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. BATEMAN, Mr. HOYER, and myself a bill to restore COLA's to retired civil servants, military personnel, and railroad employees. This bill, scheduled to take effect September 30, 1986, would exempt these groups for the proposed life of the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985. Like Social Security, the Federal military, and railroad retirees would have a COLA placed off-limits from automatic reductions. Unlike Social Security, these groups would have a COLA which, for the first time in years, would not be delayed, cut-in-half, or at the last minute eliminated.

Mr. Speaker, I voted against Gramm-Rudman because of its unbalanced approach to deficit reduction. Since its adoption, I know a number of my colleagues share my concern with regard to the Federal, military, and railroad COLA. I encourage those Members, whether they voted for Gramm-Rudman or not, to support my bipartisan bill and similar measures. Fairness is the only way we can achieve a balanced budget while honoring our original promise to maintain an adequate retirement system for this country's public servants.

TIMOTHY MENGEL RECEIVES EAGLE SCOUT AWARD

HON. GEORGE W. GEKAS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to bring to the attention of the Members of the House of Representatives the accomplishments of a young man from Selinsgrove, PA.

Mr. Timothy Mengel will be receiving the Boy Scout of America's highest award—the Eagle Scout—on Sunday, February 2, 1986, in Selingsgrove.

Timothy has been an exemplary Scout since he first joined as a Cub Scout where he received the Arrow of Light Award. Cub Scout's highest award. As a member of Boy Scout Troop 419, Timothy has held leadership positions of patrol leader, assistant patrol leader, chaplain's aide, and junior assistant scoutmaster. In 1985 he was honored as Troop 419 Scout of the Year. In addition, Timothy attended the Boy Scout National Jamboree in 1985 at Camp A.P. Hill in Virginia where he was chaplain's aide and an assistant patrol leader for the council troop.

In working toward his Eagle Scout Award, Timothy planned and completed a landscaping project for Wesley United Methodist Church and community. As part of this project he planted trees, painted and constructed signs, and, with the permission of the Pennsylvania Department of Transportation, placed street signs around the church to direct people to the church.

As if all this were not enough Timothy is also an emergency medical technician for an ambulance service in the Selinsgrove area and is an active member of the Selinsgrove High School Band.

Timothy Mengel should not only be congratulated on completing the requirements for the Eagle Scout but commended and thanked for his work in the Selinsgrove community. Congratulations Timothy and good luck in the future.

OVERSIGHT HEARINGS ON THE NATION'S CAPITAL TAXI SERVICE APPLAUDED

HON. RONALD V. DELLUMS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. DELLUMS. Mr. Speaker, I want to take this opportunity to congratulate Congressman MICHAEL D. BARNES, chairman of the Subcommittee on Government Operations and Metropolitan Affairs of the House District of Columbia Committee for his work and interest in conducting oversight hearings on the quality of taxi service in the Nation's Capital.

Over the years, I have received numerous complaints from residents, friends, colleagues, and family regarding the quality of service. Members of the Congressional Black Caucus have experienced such infractions as refusal to transport. The unfortunate experience of my wife last year with a rude taxi driver has given me more illustration of the nature and extent of the problem.

The House District of Columbia Committee has through the years maintained a continuing interest in taxi service and has conducted studies and held hearings on the taxicab industry in the city. The committee has intervened with problems at Union Station and National Airport in the past. We have to our distress reviewed the 1957 House District of Columbia Committee hearing record and found that the same questions were raised of the then Commissioner-form of government in the city and taxi industry representatives. Questions concerning the following were raised in 1957: limitations on the number of drivers; the use of zones versus the meter taxis; the then Revocation and Review Board's role in regulating the industry; and whether or not the entire control of taxicabs should be centralized in one agency.

It is my hope that as a result of this congressional hearing that we discover ways to remove impediments and insure decent responsible taxi service at a fair and equitable rate so that at long last these questions will be resolved and that the Nation's Capital will have the taxi service it deserves.

SOCIAL SECURITY TRUST FUNDS SAFEGUARD ACT OF 1986

HON. WILLIAM F. CLINGER, Jr.

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. CLINGER. Mr. Speaker, you may recall that last year when Congress could not agree on raising the debt ceiling, the Government teetered on the brink of default. It then dipped into the Social Security Trust Funds as a way of keeping the Government from going broke. In the process, the Social Security Trust Funds lost millions of dollars in interest that it would otherwise have collected. If the Government had actually gone into default, millions of our senior citizens would have been unable to cash their checks. This is not only wrong—it is absurd! The Nation's debts were not caused by Social Security, and I see no reason why Social Security Trust Funds should be used to bail the Government out of its fiscal mess.

The bill I am introducing today will forever protect the Social Security Trust Funds from being raided by the Government to pay its bills or help reduce the deficit. This legislation would make the Social Security Trust Funds truly separate from the U.S. Treasury, prohibiting any outside organization, including the Federal Government from tampering with it. Also, my bill would allow the Social Security Trust Funds to invest in federally guaranteed private bonds. The Board of Trustees would submit an annual investment plan to Congress for review and possible revision. These measures would ensure that there would always be money available to pay Social Security benefits to our senior citizens if the Government were unable to do so because of a fiscal emergency such as we saw happen late last year.

Our senior citizens deserve nothing less than the assurance that they will always be able to cash their benefit checks. We should not be trying to balance the budget on the backs of the elderly, and my bill would see to it that this never happens.

NATIONAL BOWHUNTER'S WEEK

HON. THOMAS N. KINDNESS

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation which designates the week of July 7, 1986 through July 13, 1986 as "National Bowhunter's Week".

This resolution is meant to recognize the importance of bowhunting in our Nation's early history, as well as the growth of bowhunting as a sport nationwide. Nowhere is this growth and interest in bowhunting and American archery more evident than in Ohio's Eighth Congressional District, home to the International Bowhunting Organization and 1984 Olympic gold medalist in archery, Darrell O. Pace.

We are proud, in the Eighth Congressional District and throughout the State of Ohio, of the positive influence of sportsmen and women in teaching an appreciation for our history, environment and the American spirit of competition. Indeed, these efforts are to be commended.

In recognition of the contribution of bowhunting to the livelihood of our earliest Americans and its increasing popularity, I urge my colleagues to cosponsor the resolution.

ENTERPRISE ZONES GET RESULTS

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, study after study show the effectiveness of enterprise zones in retaining small firms and stimulating new business and private investment, especially in high unemployment and below-median income areas. State after State has used enterprise zones to bring new life to neglected neighborhoods. For 5 years now I have worked to establish a Federal enterprise zone program. We now have plenty of tangible evidence on how zones run and their benefits.

Yet another study, by the Small Business Administration, recently examined enterprise zones in eight States and has confirmed the success of these zones in revitalizing city areas. Particular attention was paid to Pennsylvania's program, because it is an administrative rather than a legislative program. Though there is an annual appropriation of funds for the program, no State law has ever been enacted to set it up. Even so, in Philadelphia's American Street Zone, one of three zones in Philadelphia and in existence since 1983, 27 firms have sprung up in response to the incentives. The zone has attracted private investment of $7.48 million in its 2-year history, and 1,426 jobs have been created.

The continued message we get from the States that have tried enterprise zones is that they work. Not only are jobs created, but these jobs tend to go to the long-term unemployed. Businesses are expanding and new ones are entering these zones, reversing a long trend of business decline and closings.

Enterprise zones are efficient in other important ways. They require virtually no new Federal bureaucracy. They provide incentives for private sector investment and job creation automatically rather than through lengthy grant application procedures. Highly important is the fact that should an enterprise zone fail to induce business activity, then it will not cost the taxpayer a cent. If tax credits are claimed, it is because people have been hired and a business has been formed or expanded.

So far, business, States, and local government have embraced enterprise zones enthusiastically. If Congress fails to follow up on the experience the States are now providing us, we will have missed a golden opportunity to help get jobs and to help our cities.

IN RECOGNITION OF NEW YORK STATE SENATOR RICHARD SCHERMERHORN

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, I wish to associate myself with the remarks of my distinguished colleague from New York [Mr. FISH] who has called to our attention the outstanding public service performed over the past 16 years by New York State Senator Richard E. Schermerhorn.

Dick Schermerhorn, who resides in the city of Newburgh, NY, represents an area which straddles both my congressional district and that of our colleague [Mr. FISH]. Since his first election in 1970, Dick has become closely identified with a number of crucial issues, inlcuding fairer insurance laws, improved mass transortation for our area, and a better life for our police, our firefighters, and our veterans. The american Legion recently became one of many groups to honor Senator Schermerhorn for his service in public office and for his Americanism.

Senator Schermerhorn serves as chairman of the State senate transportation committee. His role on behalf of our youth has earned him recognition as the first recipient of the distinguished service award presented by the New York State Youth Bureau.

Mr. Speaker, it has not only been gratifying to work with Senator Schermerhorn, it is an honor to be able to refer to Dick as a friend.

In a few weeks, at its annual Lincoln day Dinner, the town of Newburgh, NY Republican Committee will present Senator Dick Schermerhorn with an award as "Republican Man of the Year." This award is not only fully earned, it is long overdue.

I invite our colleagues to join with us in saluting New York State Senator Richard Schermerhorn for a job well done.

MECHTILDE LAUER

HON. MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask my colleagues to join me in saluting Mechtilde Lauer. Sister Mechtilde is being honored today, January 29, 1986, by the Catholic Commission on Aging of the Archdiocese of Los Angeles, for her outstanding endeavors helping the aging.

Sister Mechtilde has made many contributions to the people of Los Angeles. In 1968, after retiring from a long career as a high school and English as a second language teacher, she channeled her skills and energies into the new field of gerontology. Her first such efforts were with retired sisters in the Immaculate Heart Community, to which she belongs. She also became actively involved in the Hollywood-Wilshire Committee on Aging, the Affiliated Committees on Aging, and the Education Committee of the Los Angeles County Area Agency on Aging Advisory Council. Sister Mechtilde effectively dedicated hundreds of hours in planning, holding various offices, and volunteering. For 3 years she was editor of a fine newsletter for the Southern California Interfaith Coalition on Aging.

Sister Mechtilde has helped many senior citizens on a personal basis as well. She has taken communion and offered spiritual consolation and friendship to the sick and frail elderly in their own homes and in convalescent hospitals. Her personal contact shows her care and concern for the individual dignity of the elderly as well as her interest in the general problems of aging.

Sister Mechtilde continually participates in workshops, seminars, and classes to update her knowledge of gerontology and current events. She actively supports programs for Guiding Eyes, Inc., and helps provide reading materials for prison inmates.

Mr. Speaker, this Congress continually faces difficult decisions regarding Social Security, Medicare, and other bills that affect the elderly. We know how important are the actions that we take in this area. It is helpful to be reminded that our efforts on the national level are complemented by the dedicated and talented contributions of individuals such as Mechtilde Lauer.

A TRIBUTE TO NORMAN WOLLMANN

HON. JIM COURTER

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to recognize Mr. Norman Wollmann, a driver with Permacel Tape, North Brunswick, NJ, who was recently elected District Driver of the Year by Ryder Truck Rental, Inc.

Norman's meticulous driving has earned him an outstanding reputation in the transportation field. He was chosen to represent the New Brunswick District because he has achieved, among other things, over 1 million accident-free miles. His safety record is impeccable, his knowledge of and attitude toward his work are unflawed and his dedication to his job is second to none. Additionally, he takes extra care in the operation of his equipment.

On this occasion of his award, I extend my congratulations to Norman and wish him continued success on the road and best wishes for the future.

THE 60TH ANNIVERSARY OF BOY SCOUT TROOP NO. 103 OF FLORENCE, MA

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to recognize Boy Scout Troop 103 of Florence, MA, which on March 31, 1985 celebrated its 60th anniversary. Troop 103, sponsored by Our Lady of the Annunciation Church, holds the unique distinction of being the longest continuously active Catholic troop in the Springfield diocese.

Since its conception in 1925, Troop 103 has had only two scoutmasters. The first 20 years were served by William Dunphy. The last 40 years have been under the guidance of George McDonald, who continues to this day.

These are obviously two unselfish and caring men. The fact that they have dedicated their service to the young men and boys of this troop for such an extended period of time, lends itself to the importance of this organization. It is refreshing in these time of faddism to honor such men and such a long-lasting organization as the Boy Scouts of America. Boys that are tomorrow's men learn the meaning of responsibility, duty, and commitment.

I am sure that many of you here today were once members of the Boy Scouts and remember the lessons in responsibility, comradery, and fun that you learned from your scoutmasters and fellow scouts.

This is an organization that we can all be proud of. The opportunity it gives young men and boys is a very important part of their education. Boy Scouts learn the value of working toward a goal through the merit badge system. They learn to earn what they want. While belonging to Troop 103, 120 scouts have received the highest award possible in Scouting, the eagle badge.

This kind of contribution to young people's lives, their communities, and this country is unmeasurable. It is an honor and a privilege for me and my constituents to have such a group of young men as Troop 103 in our district.

On February 8, 1986, Troop 103 will formally celebrate its 60th anniversary with a liturgical mass and dinner party. It is my hope that this will be a most memorable occasion as all involved should be proud. Let me extend my sincere congratulations and hope for their future.

MEMORIAL TO SOLDIERS WHO DIED IN NEWFOUNDLAND

HON. IKE SKELTON

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. SKELTON. Mr. Speaker, last month, I attended the 101st Division memorial service at Fort Campbell, KY, which was held in memory of the soldiers who died in Newfoundland. During that ceremony, the commanding officer of the division, Maj. Gen. Burton D. Patrick, made a very moving address. I place it in the RECORD for all the Members to read:

"Fellow soldiers and members of the finest combat division assembled in this century. We have come together on this field to honor—albeit bitter cold—to pay our lasting respect to your friends and mine who have made their final "rendezvous with destiny." It's only fitting that we have snow today. This division seems to unite under these conditions as it did 41 years ago today at Bastogne—when the battle raged there.

As your commander it is my solemn duty to call you here under these tragic and difficult circumstances. I wish with all my heart it could be otherwise—and I know that each of you feel the same way. The airplane tragedy which has taken the lives of our fellow soldiers has cast a dark cloud over Fort Campbell, and the homes of other families throughout the land. We have suffered a loss of indescribable proportions—a loss that cuts across the entire division and the nation and its territories.

Our hearts go out to the families and loved ones of those brave soldiers who lost their lives in Newfoundland while on their way home from peacekeeping duties in the Sinai. A mission that they had done so efficiently, effectively and quietly that the general public didn't even realize that they were there. Our courageous peacekeepers have departed our midst suddenly, and they have ascended to heights where even eagles can't fly. They will be missed in so many ways, and their service and sacrifice, like our fallen eagles of the past, will remain in our memories forever.

The single and very bright ray of sunshine that has made its way through our dark cloud occurred yesterday morning when the remaining flights of our task force touched down safely at Campbell Army Airfield. Heavy hearts were lifted somewhat then as those of us who were there know so well. Welcome home task force 3-502 and job well done!

It is with heavy hearts that we welcome you home, each of you know that the fiber of Fort Campbell and the screaming eagles is strong—and the cohesion and comradeship of our people is like still water—it runs deep. It is with these words that I tell you that we must now look to the future and the promise of happier days. I know that these past eight days have been trying and hectic and that you haven't had sufficient time to regroup and mourn your dead. I promise you that time. As I've said previously—we will lick our wounds, help those families in grief, reconstitute our forces and continue the mission. I'll need your total support as always—as will those families personally affected by our tragedy.

Speaking of families—I have just received this message from Mr. and Mrs. Estol Banks, parents of SP4 Bobby L. Banks, HHC, 3-502: "While we cannot be at Fort Campbell, we are with you in mind, heart, and spirit. We grieve with and for you. In our mutual sorrow we remember our son, and your loss; and their brave, courageous service to peace in our world, be strong. Be proud. We pray for you; pray for us."

I think that this message expresses the true feelings of families who have lost sons and daughters all across the country. I know they are mine.

LENNIE ROBERTS—SAN MATEO COUNTY'S ENVIRONMENTAL ADVOCATE

HON. TOM LANTOS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. LANTOS. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday afternoon the Committee for Green Foothills, a leading environmental organization on the San Francisco Peninsula, will honor Lennie Roberts at a special reception. She is most deserving of this significant honor.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call your attention and to the attention of this House to some of the accomplishments of this remarkable woman. Her lifelong concern has been to protect and preserve the special environment of the bay area. Though we on the peninsula have a special affection and claim upon her, she has served the entire San Francisco Bay area.

Lennie's energy has been quite remarkable throughout her highly active life. Originally an art major at Stanford University, she threw herself into the conservation movement wholeheartedly. Her involvement has ranged from local garden clubs and the Sierra Club, to the Committee for Green Foothills and the California Coastal Commission. Her efforts have helped educate a generation of bay area residents to the delights and benefits of our environment.

There are many active environmentalists who owe their love of nature to Lennie, and who have themselves become deeply involved in the conservation movement. This dedicated network of people has become a major force in the bay area and we now see many important programs and laws adopted directly through their efforts.

Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to join my friends and neighbors on the peninsula in paying this richly deserved tribute to Lennie Roberts. I only hope that she will continue her outstanding work. All of us in the bay area need her. Thanks to her untiring efforts, we all can pass on this precious legacy of our environment to our children and grandchildren.

HON. TED SHAW STEPS DOWN AS ICA PRESIDENT

HON. CARLOS J. MOORHEAD

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. MOORHEAD. Mr. Speaker, at the February 20, 1986 Independent Cities Association [ICA] general membership meeting, Hon. Ted Shaw, councilman for the city of South Pasadena, will step down as president of the association.

Ted Shaw has served the cities of the county of Los Angeles and the 22d Congressional District in an exemplary manner. His high standards, his productivity, his efficiency have all been recognized and praised by the ICA board of directors.

His tenure with the association has mirrored his approach to his personal, religious, and business activities. He is an advocate of the creed that if you are going to do something, you do it well and with energy and enthusiasm.

Mr. Shaw has a lifetime of commitment and involvement. He has served on the South Pasadena City Council since 1978, during which time he served three terms as mayor. He has been active in the ICA from 1982 to the present. He has simultaneously been involved in a host of civil activities.

Mr. Speaker, on behalf of the residents and communities of the 22d Congressional District, I would like to express my gratitude to Ted Shaw for all of his efforts on our behalf and to congratulate him for an effective and laudable tenure as president of the ICA.

GLENN ANDERSON—A PROFILE IN COURAGE

HON. MARIO BIAGGI

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I wish to relate to my colleagues a remarkable story about one of our most able colleagues, the gentleman from the 32d District in California, GLENN ANDERSON. It is a story involving great personal courage in the face of danger. It is a story which thankfully has a happy ending but might not have.

The date was December 30, the time about 11:45 a.m. GLENN ANDERSON had gone to the First Interstate Bank in the town of Wilmington, part of his district. GLENN had planned, as he had planned so many other days in his district on a full schedule of events, meetings, and activities. But this day was to be a great deal different than any other day of his life. He was carrying his briefcase and as he was leaning over to unlock his car door he was accosted by a "big man," the man demanded that GLENN give him his briefcase. According to a dramatic account of the incident published by the Press-Telegram of Long Beach:

ANDERSON refused to let go of the briefcase and he said he and the man were "tussling" over it when according to ANDERSON, "I felt a gun, I thought he was kidding and he shot me. I thought he had hit me."

The story continues. GLENN did relinquish his briefcase, but in doing so he startled the bandit by shoving the briefcase at him. Again in GLENNS's words:

It kept him busy and gave me a chance to run around the car. I wanted to get the car between him and me."

By this time, GLENN had realized the bullet fired had only torn through his trousers, between the thigh and knee, leaving three holes as it miraculouly passed through a crease.

As the robber ran off with the briefcase, GLENN ran from car to car in the parking lot and asked people to call the police. Further demonstrating a great sense of mind and bearing, he grabbed an envelope from his pocket, borrowed a pencil, and wrote down the license plate of the white getaway van, driven by a second man.

According to GLENN, one car unsuccessfully did try to block the path of the van as it left the parking lot, and another driver did follow the vehicle. Ultimately, after police were notified, they did capture the suspects. After a frenzied and perilous pursuit using police cars and helicopters.

GLENN ANDERSON was carrying his briefcase, a normal everyday occurrence for many of us in our line of work. Yet, the importance of the briefcase to GLENN was reflected in the first words he spoke to the bandits who tried to rob him of it: "No its mine, all my work is in there." Indeed it was, inside his briefcase were important Government documents, including constituent cases, problems, and other issues GLENN had brought home with him to read. It is a reflection on the character of our friend GLENN ANDERSON that he would take such effort, and display such courage, to protect his briefcase and the work that he was doing on behalf of his constituents.

In a sense, these criminals seeing a well-dressed man carrying a briefcase felt he was easy prey. Yet, they obviously picked on the wrong man. They don't serve with and know GLENN ANDERSON the way we his colleagues do. These criminals made the mistake of tussling with a former infantry sergeant and a man who takes great pride in his physical condition. They picked on a man who fought back, and ultimately won.

It is obvious that lady luck was with our friend GLENN ANDERSON in that bank parking lot. He is shot practically at pointblank range with the bullet traveling harmlessly through his pant leg. To quote GLENN from the same news article:

If I'd been standing up straight, it would have been in the front and out the back. The bullet went down and dug a big hole in the concrete.

GLENN ANDERSON and I share something in common. We were both elected for the first time to the 91st Congress in 1968. It has been my distinct pleasure to have worked very closely with GLENN these past 17 years. We have served together on the House Merchant Marine and Fisheries Committee. I know him to be an outstanding and effective legislator and a tireless worker for the people of the 32d District in California. Yet, I also know GLENN as a great friend and wonderful human being. He has all of these virtues and more. This experience displays but another fine attribute, courage.

I am certain that my colleagues join with me in breathing a great sigh of relief for our friend GLENN ANDERSON. Each of us should take a moment to express our thoughts to GLENN on his ordeal and how happy we are that he triumphed.

In order that my colleagues might better understand the full details of the harrowing experience endured by our friend and colleague GLENN ANDERSON, I am inserting at this point in the RECORD the full article from the Press-Telegram entitled "Police Hold 2 Suspects in Glenn Anderson Robbery, Shooting Try—Anderson Feels 'Grateful' After Brush With Bandits."

[From the Long Beach (CA) Press-Telegraph, Jan. 1, 1986]

POLICE HOLD 2 SUSPECTS IN GLENN ANDERSON ROBBERY, SHOOTING TRY—ANDERSON FEELS 'GRATEFUL' AFTER BRUSH WITH BANDITS

(By Susan Pack)

The briefcase contained just about everything—personal papers, government documents, even the keys to his Washington, DC, office.

"I always say my brains are in my briefcase," said Rep. Glenn Anderson, D-Long Beach.

So when a robber tried to grab the briefcase as Anderson left a Wilmington bank Monday, he held on tight.

"I said, 'No, it's mine,'" Anderson recalled Tuesday. "I need it. All my work is in there."

The 72-year-old congressman didn't let go until the assailant shot at him, blasting three holes in his trousers but missing his leg.

One day after the harrowing encounter, Anderson said he felt "very grateful and lucky and thankful."

"I was impressed by two things: the unbelievable speedy and professional work of the Los Angeles Police Department and the help of the people in the parking lot," he said. "I had more help than I knew what to do with."

As Anderson recounted his experience Tuesday, detectives in the police department's Harbor Division were contacting other law enforcement agencies to determine whether the two suspects were responsible for similar crimes elsewhere.

Lt. John Hopkins said there is no evidence that the robbery and shooting were politically motivated.

"There is nothing to indicate that it was anything other than a citizen being robbed," he said.

The two men—Darrel Borders, 25, of Pomona and James Lawson, 22, of Los Angeles—are expected to be arraigned Thursday in San Pedro Municipal Court on charges of robbery and attempted murder. They are being held without bail at the Harbor Division jail.

Hopkins said the pair apparently have criminal records, and Lawson may be using an alias. He said the getaway vehicle had been stolen.

Anderson said he went to First Interstate Bank at 1234 N. Avalon Blvd. at 11 a.m. Monday to discuss his MasterCard account with a Los Angeles bank executive who met him at the local branch because it was more convenient. Many of his travel expenses are charged on his MasterCard, he said, and he wanted to do a year-end review of the account.

He left the bank at 11:45 a.m. and walked to his station wagon, which was parked in a lot next to the bank and a shopping center.

Because he had half a dozen other appointments later in the day, he was wearing a suit and tie. He believes his attire and the briefcase caught the attention of the robbers, who assumed the case was full of cash.

"They saw a moderately well-dressed businessman carrying a briefcase out of the bank, and to them, that looked like money," he said.

He said he was leaning over to unlock his car door when "all of a sudden, this big man—he looked towering to me—said, "Give me your briefcase!"

The man was swarthy, he recalled, and he was wearing dark glasses and a hat. He spoke in a sort of growl.

Anderson refused to let go of the briefcase, and he said he and the man were "tussling" over it when "I felt a gun. I thought he was kidding, and he shot me."

At that point, Anderson yelled, "Hey, take it!" and shoved the briefcase at the assailant.

"It kept him busy and gave me a chance to run around the car," he said. "I wanted to get the car between him and me."

The bullet tore through Anderson's trousers between his thigh and his knee, leaving three holes as it apparently passed through a crease.

"If I'd been standing up straight, it would have been in the front and out the back," he said, "The bullet went down and dug a big hole in the concrete."

As soon as the robber ran off with the briefcase, Anderson said he dashed from car to car yelling, "Help, call the police! I've been held up!" He then grabbed an envelope from his pocket, borrowed a pencil and wrote down the license number of the white getaway van, which was driven by a second man.

Anderson said one car unsuccessfully tried to block the path of the van as it sped out of the parking lot, and another driver followed the vehicle. Less than a mile away, that driver flagged down a police car, which then took over the chase.

The suspects crashed the van into a car waiting at a signal at 106th Street and Normandie Avenue in an unincorporated area of Los Angeles county, Hopkins said. Borders was arrested there, but the other suspect escaped and crawled under a house at 1315 W. 107th St., the officer said.

That house and several others were evacuated, and the SWAT team was called in, Hopkins said. Police used tear gas to flush the suspect from his hiding place, and he surrendered shortly after 2 p.m.

Police recovered the briefcase, which was still full, and returned it to Anderson, who said it may have contained $20 or $30 in "emergency money" in addition to his papers.

Anderson said the incident didn't really change him or his views on criminals. He said he's always been a strong supporter of "use a gun, go to jail" legislation, and he believes the men who accosted him should serve time.

SPACE SHUTTLE TRIBUTE

HON. THOMAS J. DOWNEY

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Speaker, it is with great sadness that I rise today to pay tribute to the seven crewmembers of the space shuttle Challenger, who tragically perished yesterday morning when their craft blew up soon after takeoff.

I think that we were all the more shocked by yesterday's accident because of the complacency that we felt, living in a high-technology world that has witnessed 56 successful

American space flights over the last two decades. While we are used to hearing about weather delays and minor technical glitches holding up shuttle flights, no one could have expected a mishap of the magnitude of yesterday's tragedy. As we learned, though, space flight is not something to be taken for granted.

The seven crew members spent long, hard hours preparing for their flight. They volunteered for the rigorous Astronaut Program, and Ms. Sharon Christa McAuliffe competed against hundreds of other teachers from around the country for the privilege of flying in the space shuttle. Their dedication and sacrifice must not be lost.

I join with my colleagues in sending my heartfelt grief to the families and friends of the men and women who died in the service of their country yesterday. They will not be forgotten.

A TRIBUTE TO HAROLD M. RYAN

HON. DENNIS M. HERTEL

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. HERTEL of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, it is with great pride that I rise to pay tribute to a man who has selflessly dedicated the majority of this life to public service, former Congressman Harold M. Ryan.

On February 6, his many friends in the community will hold a long overdue testimonial dinner in honor of Mr. Ryan. In choosing to salute him, they no doubt took, into consideration Mr. Ryan's unceasing commitment to public welfare, as seen in his exemplary career, which spans back to 1944. At that time, he was assistant prosecuting attorney for Wayne County, MI. From 1949–1961, Mr. Ryan represented Michigan's First Congressional District in the Michigan Senate. Between 1961 and 1964, he served the 14th Congressional District of Michigan in the U.S. House of Representatives. For the next 14 years, Mr. Ryan engaged in the private practice of law. In 1978, he was elected to the Wayne County circuit bench, a position he held until his retirement last year. To each of these positions, Harold Ryan brought a rare blend of intelligence, compassion, integrity, and involvement.

Harold Ryan's many accomplishments extend beyond the political realms to the community, where he continues his longtime commitment to the well-being of others. Mr. Ryan is also known as a generous and loving family man and friend.

As he is honored by his friends and family, Mr. Ryan can reflect with pride on his many contributions to the residents of Michigan. I would like to join them in extending my warmest congratulations to Harold Ryan, his lovely wife, Lillian Wargnier-Ryan and his five children, Kathleen, Harold, Jr., Nancy, Theresa, and John on this meritous occasion.

REPEAL GRAMM-RUDMAN-HOLLINGS

HON. JIM MOODY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, today, I am introducing legislation to repeal recently passed Gramm-Rudman-Hollings legislation.

I fully support deficit reduction, and I have introduced and supported various items of legislation to make real deficit cuts. But Gramm-Rudman-Hollings is not a rational or reasonable way for Congress to proceed.

First, it allows Congress and the President to avoid difficult choices in favor of a mindless formula—a gross abdication of congressional responsibility which may well be unconstitutional. Second, it is flawed economically because it requires a larger deficit cut when the economy is weaker and a smaller deficit cut when the economy is stronger—a result which exacerbates rather than softens fluctuations in the business cycle.

I voted against Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. I later joined 11 congressional colleagues in challenging its constitutionality in court. And though our suit is still pending, I am now introducing legislation that will allow us to restore the basic congressionally directed budget process which this country has used for 200 years.

Gramm-Rudman-Hollings was a mistake that we will surely come to regret. I hope that we can muster the political courage to admit our error, repeal the measure, and confront the important task of responsible deficit reduction.

COMMENDS APPRAISERS

HON. JAMES A. TRAFICANT, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to express my support for H.R. 202, which commends the Society of Real Estate Appraisers on the occasion of its golden anniversary, and to thank my colleague from Illinois, Representative CARDISS COLLINS for introducing it.

Although the Society of Real Estate Appraisers has chapters all over the world, I am pleased also to recognize today the Mahoning Valley No. 63 Chapter whose President is S. Martin Oyer, SRPA, of 3710 Mahoning Avenue, Youngstown, Ohio 44515. The Mahoning Valley Chapter encompasses Mahoning, Trumbull, and Columbiana Counties in my district.

Members of the Society of Real Estate Appraisers are employed by financial institutions, corporations, Federal, State, and local governments, and they also practice as independent fee appraisers. Their commitment to professionalism is exemplified by their extensive educational system of seminars and courses directed toward the advancement of the profession which are attended by approximately 8,000 people every year, members and nonmembers alike.

Mr. Speaker, the Society of Real Estate Appraisers has for 50 years promoted professional standards for all real estate appraisers. The need for sound, unbiased real estate appraisals continues to be as important today as it was when the Society of Real Estate Appraisers was first founded. I ask my colleagues to join with me in passing H.R. 202 commending the Society of Real Estate Appraisers for 50 years of service.

ALDEN AAROE, CELEBRATING 30 YEARS OF BROADCASTING

HON. THOMAS J. BLILEY, JR.

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Speaker, January 31, 1986, marks an important milestone for my friend Alden Aaroe of Richmond, VA. For 30 years Richmonders have been waking up to Alden's special brand of humor and information as the announcer of WRVA Radio's morning program. More than once, Alden's wit and wisdom have gotten me off to a fresh start in the morning. I miss hearing him when I'm in Washington, and I look forward to the mornings I'm in Richmond where I can be sure of an entertaining and informative start on the day.

On January 31, Alden will be celebrating his 30th year with Richmond and WRVA Radio. On behalf of his loyal fans, friends, and coworkers, I would like to say. "Thank you, Alden and may you be a part of our mornings for another 30 years."

TRIBUTE TO DR. JEAN HOLLISTER AND JOHN HARRISON

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, shortly before Christmas last month, my district suffered a great tragedy. A Life Flight air ambulance helicopter from St. Vincent Medical Center in Toledo crashed on its way to pick up a traffic accident victim. The pilot, John Harrison and a flight physician Dr. Jean Hollister were killed while on a mission of mercy.

Our community has always been blessed with courageous people, who have been willing to put their lives on the line in order to save the lives of others. We are very proud of the work done by the Life Flight team. They have saved lives—the ultimate contribution to society.

The grief over their deaths has been shared by our entire region. Though St. Vincent Michael Medical Center's Life Flight Program has rebounded with great strength and professionalism, the sorrow will always be felt. But even in tragedy their can be solace. Because Dr. Jean Hollister and John Harrison will always be remembered, their courage and willingness to give of themselves so that others may benefit will serve as a shining example of that great spirit of community which the French writer Alexis de Toqueville found so exciting on his visit to America a century and a half ago. Dr. Jean Hollister and John Harrison epitomized what is best in America.

For myself and my colleagues in the U.S. House of Representatives, I offer my deepest condolences to the families of Dr. Jean Hollister and John Harrison. Thank you for letting them be part of our lives as well as yours. May the respect and admiration that they enjoyed in life somehow ease the pain of their death.

WILLIAM OVERMEER HONORED

HON. MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportuntiy to bring to the attention of my colleagues the distinguished career of William Overmeer.

For the past decade William "Bill" Overmeer has demonstrated outstanding service to our community, as well as many adjoining areas, with meritorious achievement. During 10 years with the West San Gabriel Valley Consortium, Bill gave careful adherence to the fiduciary responsibilities of his position. Being a stickler for organization and thoroughness, Bill implemented high standards, reduced costs, and maximized the number of local residents trained. In addition to his work with the consortium, Mr. Overmeer spent 6 years with United Community Efforts Inc. in East Los Angeles. In the private sector, he performed outstandingly as an assistant controller for two different public accounting firms.

Perhaps the greatest example of this man's philanthropy is the 5 years he spent in the Royal Dutch underground serving to eliminate tyrannies in Germany and Holland. Here we find the intensity of this great American as he stood tall to fight the terror of oppression and represent the principles of freedom and justice.

Without hesitation and with much admiration I salute a public servant; an man of great moral character; and a man willing to uphold qualities which separate the humane from the inhumane. I salute William Overmeer.

AMERICANS FOR PRESIDENT REAGAN'S FOREIGN POLICY

HON. WILLIAM W. COBEY, JR.

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, January 29, 1986

Mr. COBEY. Mr. Speaker, Americans for President Reagan's Foreign Policy have called to my attention three articles from The Truth, a New Hampshire newspaper officializing in foreign affairs matters. All Americans are affected for better or worse by U.S. foreign policy decisions. I believe that we all need to be well informed about these policies in order to protect not only our Nation, but our individual lives and property from the costs and personal dangers generated by the Soviet Union's expansions and Soviet sponsored terrorism.

Over the last 5 years, the Reagan administration has demonstrated that it is committed to turning back the Soviet-takeover tide in Central America, Afghanistan, and southern Africa. I believe the two great foreign policy problems confronting President Reagan today are the Soviet efforts to expand their influence in the world and the Soviet strategy enunciated by late Soviet leader Krushchev, who said "* * * our aim is to gain control of the two great treasure houses on which the West depends * * * oil from the Persian Gulf and strategic minerals from southern Africa."

Today we are seeing this dream become a reality. Currently, there are around 35,000 Cuban troops occupying Angola on behalf of the Soviet Union. These troops not only control the Soviet-puppet government, but they also support the Soviet backed terrorist group known as the Southwest African People Organization [SWAPO]. This organization uses Soviet military equipment under the guidance of Soviet military advisers in a campaign of violence to gain control of the country of Namibia before the recently formed Namibian Government can achieve internationally accepted independence.

Within the broad framework of U.N. Resolution 435, the people of Namibia have chosen their own political leaders and have established the Transitional Government of National Unity. This democratic government assures all powers of local self-determination by successfully negotiating a transfer of total local governing authority to the Namibian people from South Africa.

I believe the United States should lend political and economic support to this new government in Namibia because it offers a responsible anti-Soviet Government, supported by the people of Namibia, as a democratic alternative to a puppet-state set up by SWAPO.

I recommend the following articles to my colleagues and other Americans who have an interest in the foreign policy of the United States.

[From The Truth, Winter 1986]

STATE DEPARTMENT UNDER FIRE FOR NAMIBIA POLICY

OPPOSES SELF-GOVERNMENT

WASHINGTON, DC.—The U.S. State Department has come under direct attack by two respected forces regarding its handling of Namibia, an African country larger than Texas immediately south of Angola. Senator Steve Symms (R-ID) and Carl Shipley, President of the U.S.-South West Africa/Namibia Trade and Cultural Council, both lambast the State Department as "architects of disaster" for their "head in the sand" thinking regarding Namibia.

In articles below, they present the true picture of this virtually important, sparsely populated country, whose people desire their own government, free of the Communist influence which threatens them through SWAPO (South West Angola Peoples Organization), backed by the Soviets and the United Nations.

While the State Department encourages U.S. business to locate in Communist Angola, entrance into Namibia is discouraged. The State Department is still seeking to effect U.N. Resolution 435, under which the U.N. would supervise an election of an assembly in Namibia. However, control of this assembly would be seized by SWAPO, with its U.N. backing. Shipley points out that it is a blueprint for U.N. sponsorship of a Soviet-puppet SWAPO government in Namibia.

FURTHERS RED AIMS IN SOUTHERN AFRICA

(By Senator Steve Symms)

As a member of the Senate Subcommittee on Economic Resources, Competitiveness and Security Economics, I have long been concerned with the fact that since 1970 the U.S. Department of State has discouraged investment in Namibia, at a time when political leaders within that Territory have been trying to negotiate their independence from South Africa.

Namibia has been administered for the past 65 years under a 1920 League of Nations Mandate as a former German territory conquered by the British (using South African colonial forces) in World War I. On June 17 of this year, the Multi-Party Conference of Namibia's internal political leaders, all of whom have been elected or designated by their political parties and their various population groups to represent their interests, persuaded the Government of South Africa to transfer to the MPC all legislative, judicial and executive functions theretofore exercise in the territory by the Administrator-General appointed by South Africa.

The South African government voluntarily, and on the basis of non-violent and honest negotiations, agreed to the MPC request. Thus, the people of Namibia now enjoy all powers of local self-government (except foreign relations and defense, which they voluntarily left in South African hands because of their own lack of capacity in these areas) for the first time since the original German colonization of South West Africa in the 1800's.

However, the same type of head-in-the-sand thinking that seems to be a congential affliction of bureaucrats in the U.S. Department of State, and which has given us such catastrophic diplomatic losses as North Korea, East Germany, the Berlin Wall, Soviet occupied Vietnam, Soviet occupied Afghanistan, and Soviet-puppet governments in Angola, Ethiopa, Mozambique and North Yemen, now turns a blind eye on the TGNU (Transitional Government of National Unity) in Namibia.

Thus, our State Department is once again lending its indirect support to Soviet empire expansionism in Africa by opposing recognition of the political reality of the TGNU, opposing the right of self government of the people of Namibia, and closing its eyes to the fact that the United Nations, the U.N. Council for Namibia, and its subordinate agencies all strongly support, both financially and politically, the Soviet-backed terrorist forces seeking to seize control of Namibia and bring it under the domination of the Kremlin before that Territory can achieve internationally acceptable independence.

H.R. 2589 would apparently subject all Americans, individual as well as corporate, to five years in jail and fines ranging from $50,000 to $1 million for using or dealing in any product which might contain a "natural resource" originating in Namibia without permission of the U.N. Council of Namibia. This proposal to transfer a part of the Nation's sovereignty to SWAPO's chief support in the United Nations would, if it were not so well intentioned, come under the heading of treason.

For years committees of the Congress, as well as the Congressional Budget Office, have emphasized the 100 percent import dependence of the U.S. on certain strategic minerals found in the free world only in southern Africa, many of which are found in Namibia. In 1973, former Soviet leader Brezhnev announced to the world the Soviet goal of gaining control of the two great treasure houses—the oil in the Persian gulf and the minerals in Southern Africa—on which the industrial West depends.

Shortly thereafter, Soviet-backed "liberation groups" shot their way into power in Ethiopia, Angola, and Mozambique, as implementation of the Brezhnev policy got underway. Namibia is the next target.

Namibia, on the southwest coast of the African continent, like Mozambique on the eastern coast and Angola, on the western coast, is another keystone in Soviet strategy. Once Namibia is in the Soviet bloc, or behind the "iron curtain," then the Soviets can at the very least subject the U.S. to diplomatic blackmail, and under more severe conditions cut off our access as well as the access of NATO countries of Europe, to the minerals and oil on which the West depends.

One does not have to have a very good memory to recall that in the Soviet-sponsored compaign to seize control of what is now Zimbabwe, sanctions played a part. Rhodesia, as it was then known, sold its chrome on which we are 100 percent dependent, to the Russians, who then sold it to the U.S. and the rest of the world at more than twice the price. That is how sanctions and Soviet diplomacy work.

NAMIBIA: U.S. POLICY'S "FAILED MISSION"

(By Carl Shipley)

Shortly after the Reagan Administration assumed responsibility for U.S. foreign relations upon entering office in 1981, President Reagan's United Nations Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick outlined U.S. policy for Namibia, formerly known as South West Africa, as follows:

"Our principal goal . . . is independence for Namibia . . . Namibia has the largest known uranium deposits in the world, and a second goal we have is to prevent this mineral-rich territory from being permitted to slide into the Soviet sphere of influence, which has expanded markedly in Africa. A related strategic goal is to keep the vital waterways around Namibia out of hostile hands . . . Our goals are complicated by the presence of more than 30,000 Cuban troops in neighboring Angola."

Five years later, the State Department architects of disaster who are charged with implementing President Reagan's policy for Namibia have produced a tattered and shredded shambles.

During these five Reagan years, the U.S. Export-Import Bank has extended loans of at least $500 million to the Marxist government of Angola, which seized power with Soviet backing in 1976, while withholding aid and discouraging investment in pro-West, South West Africa (Namibia).

These loans have enabled Angola's Soviet-puppet government to entrench itself against its own citizens led by Jonas Savimbi and his UNITA forces. Indeed, the U.S. Department of State continues to urge President Reagan to withhold humanitarian and military aid for Savimbi's UNITA freedom fighters—the result is indirect support of Angola's Soviet-controlled government.

During these five years, the number of Cuban combat troops occupying Angola has doubled from 20,000 to 40,000. There have been massive infusions of Soviet military equipment, including MIG Soviet fighter planes, the deadly Soviet helicopter gunships, Soviet tanks, Soviet-antiaircraft weapons and rocket launchers, a quadrupling of Soviet and Soviet bloc military advisors, MIG and gunship pilots, and support forces.

In addition to heavy equipment, Cuban combat soldiers, and Soviet military personnel, the Soviets are supplying enormous quantities of AK47 rifles, ammunition and land mines. Angola is technically incapable of producing a single piece of military hardware, or a single aircraft or vehicle—the Soviets supply it all.

The disaster architects at the State Department are intelligent men and women, but their self-designed Namibia policy is a "failed mission." It is time to recognize that no progress can be made without participation of Namibia's Multi Party Conference political leaders.

Angola continues to help the Soviets equip, train and finance the SWAPO terrorists who operate from bases in southern Angola in a campaign of "landmine" murder and abduction of school children to intimidate the black civilian population of northern Namibia into accepting a SWAPO government.

UNITY PARTY A REALITY

The disaster architects at the State Department persist in opposing any U.S. investment in Namibia, despite the fact Namibia has the only successful multi-racial, multi-party government with a black majority in southern Africa.

They turn a blind eye on United Nations pro-SWAPO partiality, and have opposed both economic and disaster aid to the people of Namibia in the devastating drought of recent years, while funneling aid to the Marxist governments in Angola, Mozambique, and elsewhere in Africa.

They stubbornly refuse to acknowledge the existence, muchless the reality, that on June 17, 1985, the Multi-Party Conference of Namibian political leaders successfully negotiated a complete transfer of all governmental powers over the Territory from South Africa's Administrator-General, who had governed Namibia since 1920.

Today the people of Namibia, as a result of their own efforts and despite U.S. State Department opposition, have more democratic freedom and the only peacefully negotiated multi-racial, multi-party national unity government than any former colonial area of Africa.

Some observers think the failed mission in Namibia is a result of the State Department's blind adherence to United Nations Security Council Resolution 435 of 1978—the Carter Administration's independence plan cooked up by his later-dismissed U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young and his deputy, Donald McHenry. Under this resolution, the U.N. would supervise an election of a constituent assembly in Namibia to write an independence constitution.

U.N. DESIGNATED SWAPO

The fatal flaw in Resolution 435 is the fact that at the time the Carter Administration "architected" it, the U.N. had already designated Soviet-backed SWAPO as the "sole authentic" representative of the Namibian people, conferred permanent observer status on SWAPO and established a U.N. agency known as the Council for Namibia through which the U.N. channels millions of dollars a year to finance SWAPO propaganda, offices and meetings throughout the world. It is a blueprint for the U.N. sponsorship of a Soviet-puppet SWAPO Government in Namibia.

So here we have President Reagan's policy as articulated by Jeane Kirkpatrick held hostage to a Carter Administration blueprint to deliver the people and political leaders of Namibia to the tender mercies of SWAPO.

Having some familiarity with such well known Soviet and Soviet bloc techniques to persuade the recalcitrant as the "Gulag" peninsula, the salt mines, the insane asylum or a mind-bending session in a brain-washing facility, the people of Namibia are understandably inclined to prefer internationally acceptable independence within the parameters of the Resolution 435 plan under the supervision of an international agency not having pre-picked the winner of an independence election, and one without its thumb on the scales for one party as against all others.

TGNU, REAGAN'S BEST HOPE

The Namibian Transitional Government of National Unity, now providing interim local self-government in a commonwealth relationship with South Africa, is the Reagan Administration's last best hope of saving President Reagan's failed mission in Namibia. The TGNU is flexible, pro-West broadly supported by the people of Namibia, includes all major political parties and ethnic groups, and invites SWAPO to join in national unity. Above all it has successfully and peacefuly negotiated a transfer of power from the RSA to its own multi-racial, black majority Multi-Party Conference, something the disaster architects of the State Department have failed to accomplish after seven years of defeated struggle.

And yet the State Department, thumbs in its ears, hands over its eyes, pursues its deaf, dumb and blind policy of pretending the Namibian TGNU does not exist. The predictable result is a "failed mission" for the Reagan Administration unless the foggy bottom strategists start implementing the Reagan policy instead of thwarting it.

SENATE COMMITTEE MEETINGS

Title IV of Senate Resolution 4, agreed to by the Senate on February 4, 1977, calls for establishment of a system for a computerized schedule of all meetings and hearings of Senate committees, subcommittees, joint committees, and committees of conference. This title requires all such committees to notify the Office of the Senate Daily Digest—designated by the Rules Committee—of the time, place, and purpose of the meetings, when scheduled, and any cancellations or changes in the meetings as they occur.

As an additional procedure along with the computerization of this information, the Office of the Senate Daily Digest will prepare this information for printing in the Extensions of Remarks section of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on Monday and Wednesday of each week.

Any changes in committee scheduling will be indicated by placement of an asterisk to the left of the name of the unit conducting such meetings.

Meetings scheduled for Thursday, January 30, 1986, may be found in the Daily Digest of today's RECORD.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Thursday, January 30, 1986

The House met at 11 a.m.

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

We give thanks, O God, for the feeling of unity that brings us together as one people. As we all share our creation as the gift of Your hand, so let us live in ways that express this heritage of life and recognize each other as sisters and brothers in need of each other's encouragement and support. May we live and work in the way of unity and peace and so reflect the brightness of Your love to us. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

INTRODUCTION OF LEGISLATION OPPOSING THE PROPOSED URBAN MOBILITY BLOCK GRANT

(Mr. BIAGGI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Speaker, I have introduced legislation which should interest all Members who get Federal aid for mass transit in their districts. It is a resolution opposing the proposed urban mobility block grant—expected to be unveiled as part of the administration's fiscal year 1987 budget.

Under this plan Federal aid to highways and to mass transit would be consolidated into this single grant. It sounds simple enough. Yet there is far more to it than first meets the eye.

It would be accompanied by as much as a 40-percent reduction in the present $4 billion provided for mass transit. A cut of this size would be felt in each of the 733 urbanized areas in the United States where mass transit is provided. At least 15 percent of these programs could be shut down, ending service for more than 1 billion riders. Close to 100,000 jobs could be lost.

For my home city of New York, this block grant could be the death knell for mass transit. It could slash Federal aid by 50 percent. The metropolitan transit authority which operates our buses and subways already has a $500 million budget deficit. Bus and subway fares were just raised to $1. Any reduction in aid will increase that fare. A 50-percent reduction would cause an astronomical fare hike.

This ludicrous plan must and will be fought. This is not a policy of give and take—it is take and take more from those least able to give more.

APPRECIATION EXPRESSED FOR INFANT DONOR SEARCH

(Mr. SAXTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAXTON. Mr. Speaker, I stood before you last November and I asked you to help aid in the search for a liver for an infant in my district, Andrea Shimer of Hainesport, NJ.

I appreciate the response I received from many of you who were kind enough to appeal—in your home districts—for a liver for Andrea. And I know Andrea's parents would want me to convey their deep gratitude for all who aided in the search.

I'm happy to report that Andrea's liver search was a success. On December 29 Andrea underwent a 13-hour liver transplant at Children's Hospital of Pittsburgh. And I received word yesterday that her condition has been upgraded from critical to serious.

Andrea is an example of the lifegiving potential of transplantation, and its ability to bring some hope out of the darkness of death.

Again, I thank you and commend your efforts on Andrea's behalf.

CONGRATULATIONS, MIKE DITKA

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, in 1960, I had the distinct honor of being a teammate and a close personal friend of Mike Ditka at the University of Pittsburgh. Mike was a tenacious defender, a premier receiver who became a consensual All-American.

Mike Ditka was then drafted by George Halas and the Bears and became an impact player overnight, earning Rookie of the Year honors in 1961. As many people know, in 1963, prior to the recent Super Bowl victory, he led the Bears to the NFL championship over a great Giant team that had Y.A. Tittle and Frank Gifford among others on that club.

Ditka is now a legend, he is strong and spirited just like the people of Aliquippa, PA, his hometown, who suffer such tough economic times.

Now, as his old college quarterback, I am very proud to be on the floor of Congress to congratulate Mike as a great coach whose achievements and accomplishments will be remembered in the years to come with the names of Halas, Al Davis, Paul Brown, Tom Landry, Vince Lombardi, Chuck Noll, Don Shula, and many others.

God bless you, Mike—your old teammates are all proud of you and the great Bear team you have developed, and also of the spirit and attitude you share with the people of western Pennsylvania, who are experiencing the toughest economic times of their lives—but like you, they'll never give up.

OIL PRICE BLUES

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, in 1974, the price of oil was a little over $10 a barrel. When it quadrupled in 1979, we blamed it on the greed and malice of the producers. In the 1980's, it is the other shoe that pinches. As the price of oil is falling to the $15 level, we blame it on the oversupply and inelastic demand. Clearly, these explanations are inconsistent. Both the price explosion of the seventies, and the price implosion of the eighties, are the effects of the very same cause: the unstable value of the dollar. Oil is just as important and useful in 1986 as it was in 1979. The difference is that the name of the game in 1979 was inflation, and today it is deflation.

But inflation and deflation are not simple mirror images of one another. It is much easier to climb into a hole than it is to climb out of it. Likewise, inflation can be relatively painless, while deflation is always excruciatingly painful. If the price of oil falls to $10, we shall not be back at square one. We shall be much worse off, as our banking system will be topheavy with illiquid, unsalable, bad assets, and the world will no longer be able to carry the debt burden it has contracted in the heady inflationary phase.

Yet there is a ray of hope. Prices can be stabilized, and the world debt can be consolidated, under a gold standard, if the executive branch is willing to reassume the monetary leadership which it abandoned in 1968, and the Congress is willing to reclaim its monetary powers that it abdicated in 1971.

THE COLD-BLOODED, SELFISH DuVALIER REGIME

(Mr. OWENS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OWENS. Mr. Speaker, last night new riots erupted in Haiti. It is part of an escalating pattern where there have been bloody riots over the last few months, and among the numerous people who have been killed, there have been six schoolchildren killed. The dictator of Haiti, Jean-Claude DuValier, has seen it necessary to close down the schools in order to defend himself against his own children.

Haiti is ruled by a group of cold-blooded, selfish people who have plundered, over the years, the resources of the country. They have wrecked the economy. There is no hope as long as the DuValier dictatorship remains. We can participate in a peaceful or a more peaceful transition to a new government in Haiti merely by exerting the kind of leverage we have in this country through peaceful means. By refusing to give the $8 million that remains in the State Department, that $8 million is being held presently by the Secretary of State, due to the fact that Haiti has not met human rights requirements.

We should not only continue to hold that, we should publicize the reason we are holding it, and we should bring other peaceful sanctions to bear on Haiti and try to get a transition to a new democratic government that represents all the people of Haiti and give the people of Haiti an opportunity to make a decision about the kind of government they have.

Haiti is just 90 miles by air away from the coast of Florida, from Miami. Haiti is in this hemisphere. It is our responsibility. We have as much responsibility for Haiti as we have for any other part of the hemisphere, and we should, through peaceful means, exert the maximum amount of pressure to rid the people of Haiti of the repressive dictatorship they have now and give them a democratic government.

IMPROVED RAILROAD SERVICE IS GOAL OF NEW VERSION OF CONSUMER RAIL EQUITY ACT

(Mr. TAUZIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, in 1980, Congress enacted the Staggers Rail Act with the goal of deregulating railroad rates and practices where competition exists.

The Staggers Act has worked well where competition exists. However, the ICC has failed to assure that "captive shippers"—those shippers that are subject to railroad monopoly power—are protected against unreasonable rates and has further failed to prevent railroad practices that reduce a shipper's alternatives. The result has been unreasonably high rates and reduced bargaining power for certain shippers and consumers, including electric rate payers, farmers, agricultural shippers, and manufacturers of captive products.

Mr. Speaker, I am introducing a new, improved version of the Consumer Rail Equity Act that was first introduced in February. This legislation addresses three areas of problems that are being experienced under the present law: protection against unreasonable rates for captive shippers, assurance that the opportunities for competition between railroads is maximized, and protection against unnecessary abandonment of so-called uneconomic railroad facilities.

We believe this legislation will assure that our present law governing railroads is not only sound, but fair to shippers, consumers, and local communities that depend on railroad service.

IN SUPPORT OF FEDERAL REVENUE SHARING

(Mr. MAZZOLI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today in support of the Federal Revenue Sharing Program and would like to urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring H.R. 1400, introduced by the distinguished gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS] which seeks to extend the Revenue Sharing Program past its September 1986 scheduled expiration.

General revenue sharing is an efficient, cost effective and flexible program which should be reauthorized and spared the full thrust of the Gramm-Rudman deficit-cutting knife.

Less than 2 percent of revenue sharing costs go for administration of the program. It carries no bloated, top-heavy bureaucracy. It is lean and trim and delivers dollars to local officials with the least possible overhead and with the maximum possible flexibility and latitude in meeting local needs.

It should also be noted that funding for revenue sharing has been frozen at the same $4.6 billion figure since 1980. Therefore, it is not a villian in the Federal deficit drama.

Last week—through the courtesy of Louisville Mayor Jerry Abramson—I was permitted to attend a meeting of the National Conference of Mayors and to participate in a special workshop on revenue sharing.

The picture nationally mirrors ours in Louisville and Jefferson Counties. The cities, counties, the municipalities have taken hard budget cuts since 1981. Revenue sharing funds—by their flexibility—have enabled local government to fill holes and tears made in the "safety net" by these cuts. Take away revenue sharing and the safety net springs holes too large to fill.

President Reagan was correct in 1983 when he praised the Federal Revenue Sharing Program, saying then that "the Federal Government never spent money more wisely."

This is still true today and I hope Congress acts quickly to extend this vital and necessary program.

THE VANISHING FAMILY: CRISIS IN BLACK AMERICA

(Mr. COATS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. COATS. Mr. Speaker, last Saturday evening CBS ran a powerful special entitled "The Vanishing Family: Crisis in Black America," hosted by Bill Moyers. Bill Moyers is known to most as a television commentator, but those who are politically involved probably also remember him as a key promoter of the Great Society programs of the 1960's.

As Moyers surveyed the wreckage of the unintended consequences of all the well-intentioned programs of the Great Society, he has laid the groundwork for some larger questions that must be addressed if we are to look beyond simplistic cliches and the failed solutions of the past 20 years.

While those interviewed on this special did not advocate the sudden abolition of programs designed to aid the poor, they also frankly acknowledged a seemingly obvious truth: that the "solutions" of the past have simply not worked as intended.

It astounds me that the reaction of some recognized national leaders is to continue to deny that the problem is anything less than simply an unlimited Government checkbook. In doing so, they ignore the reality of what was so well documented in the CBS special. These critics' reaction is the classic case of—"When you don't like the message, kill the messenger."

However, Mr. Speaker, we cannot continue to ignore the message. The erosion of values and the breakup of the family is having a tragic impact on our society, and strong families are essential to the future of this country.

PRESIDENTIAL MEDAL OF FREEDOM FOR "CHALLENGER" CREW MEMBERS

(Mr. LELAND asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LELAND. Mr. Speaker, Tuesday's tragic space shuttle accident stunned the entire world. The success of the Space Shuttle Program has blinded many of us to the brilliance and complications involved with these flights. The seven men and women who died Tuesday, however, were not blinded to the risks of their participation. They knew the dangers, yet chose to continue for the advancement of humankind. These seven men and women are real heros, who died serving our country and the world. Their courage, dedication, and contributions will never be forgotten.

Today I intend to introduce a bill calling on the President to posthumously award the Presidential Medal of Freedom to the astronauts of the space shuttle Challenger. It is the least we can do for our fallen heroes. I urge all my colleagues to join me in this effort.

SAVE HOUSING FROM FURTHER BUDGET CUTS

(Mr. MANTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MANTON. Mr. Speaker, last year President Reagan requested a 2-year moratorium on all new funding for assisted housing. Recognizing the serious housing problems that continue to face this Nation, Congress rejected the administration's request and appropriated roughly $14 billion for housing and community development programs.

Next week the President will submit to Congress his budget for fiscal year 1987. The President's budget proposes to defer or rescind more than half of the funds appropriated for housing and community development in fiscal year 1986.

Apparently President Reagan failed to get the message that Congress does not intend to abandon those Americans who are in desperate need of safe, decent affordable housing.

Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt that we must all tighten our belts in order to reduce the Federal deficit. But during the past 5 years, assisted housing programs have already been cut by more than 60 percent. Enough is enough. The homeless and families who cannot afford safe housing have sacrificed enough for deficit reduction.

I urge my colleagues to further resist President Reagan's efforts to dismantle Federal housing and community development programs.

UDAG PROGRAM PROVES ITSELF A SUCCESS

(Mr. KANJORSKI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. KANJORSKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to voice my strenuous objections to the administration's announced deferral of $200 million in fiscal year 1986 urban development action grant funds and $500 million in community development block grant funds.

These funds were appropriated by Congress to assist distressed areas in their effort to stimulate economic development, renovate downtowns, and create new employment opportunities. The only conclusion I can reach from this deferral is that the administration believes unemployment rates of 10 percent and poverty levels of 15 percent are acceptable in some parts of this country.

The UDAG Program has been one of the most successful Federal programs for stimulating development in distressed areas. Since 1977, $3.9 billion of Federal funds have leveraged almost $24 billion in private investment and created 513,000 new permanent jobs. In my congressional district in 1984, $3 million of UDAG funds leveraged some $20 million in private investment and created 500 new jobs.

I urge my colleagues to join me in objecting to this deferral. Undermining the continued redevelopment of our Nation's distressed areas is penny wise and pound foolish.

EEC RETALIATION

(Mr. SCHULZE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHULZE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to express my dismay over the recent decision of the EEC to restrict U.S. exports of fertilizer, coded paper and animal fats from our country in response to the limits our country placed on semifinished steel imports from the EEC.

We recently negotiated a fair and equitable steel agreement with the European Community, which took months of difficult negotiations. The EEC was granted a relatively large 5.5-percent share of the U.S. market.

Their action is shocking particularly because the majority of limited products are farm related. The EEC has one of the most—if not the most—protected agricultural markets in the world. These new restrictions will adversely affect the delicate trade relations between our country and Europe.

I would like the EEC to know that the U.S. Congress stands firmly behind the U.S. Government's position on the decision to limit U.S. imports of semifinished steel from the EEC. I hope the EEC will reconsider this recent protective action.

HIGH TRADE DEFICITS

(Mr. BONKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Speaker, the Department of Commerce today is announcing the trade deficit statistics for the past month and the previous year. I am afraid that the statistics for 1985 will bear out our worst expectations about the staggering trade deficit that faces this country. We had hoped that it would not reach $150 billion, but apparently it is very close to that figure. More disturbingly, the trade deficit for December is the highest recorded trade deficit in this country's history.

We have averaged about $12 billion for each month of 1985.

U.S. imports are up considerably and U.S. exports are down. Obviously, all of us in this Chamber are aware of the profound implications of this trade deficit. Everywhere you look across the economic landscape of this country you will see plant closures and people out of work and communities suffering.

President Reagan announced in September his trade initiative to deal effectively with the problem; but despite all those initiatives, we have not seen anything that will result in a lower trade deficit. His war chest apparently is going nowhere to deal with mixed credit problems. The strike force has been compromised in part by former White House aides who are now on contract with foreign companies and their firms.

The dollar has dropped, due in part to Secretary Baker's meeting in New York of last September, but if the administration cannot put forth policies that will effectively deal with the problem and bring down our trade deficit, then the House and the Senate will have no choice but to take up this issue and try to come forth with proposals that are necessary to bring down that trade deficit and get our economy moving again.

STRONG SUPPORT FOR NEW VERSION OF CONSUMER RAIL EQUITY ACT

(Mr. ROGERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I rise today with my colleagues in strong support for the new version of the Consumer Rail Equity Act.

We've honed the bill down, simplifying some overly complex provisions. And I can tell my colleagues that we've trimmed it down to fighting weight and are ready to move it forward.

In our new lean, mean form, we've kept the support of our original coalition of consumer, utility, coal, and agricultural groups. But over the past months, we've been building up steam and are winning the support of many new groups and industries.

The word is out. The Staggers Act is in need of fixing. And captive shippers are turning to the Consumer Rail Equity Act as the best way to do the job.

My good friend from Louisiana, [Mr. TAUZIN], will be placing a detailed description of this new version of the bill in today's RECORD. I urge my colleagues to look it over and add their names as cosponsors of this important legislation.

OVERRIDE DEFERRAL OF UDAG PROGRAM

(Mr. RIDGE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. RIDGE. Mr. Speaker, just yesterday, a UDAG grant was approved for my district which will open the door for a new industry, provide financing for further economic development projects, and given opportunity to 102 workers who will occupy the new jobs there in September.

As you may already know, when President Reagan's budget is submitted next week, it will contain a deferral for about $200 million in the UDAG Program. The deferral to be offered would represent a total cut of over 70 percent in this program in a 1-year period after it already endured a 25 percent cut last year. In my home area, like other parts of the country, we have been successful in using the UDAG Program effectively, to help minimize the effects of long-term high unemployment.

In past years, as the administation has annually sought to zero out the program, the Congress has repeatedly shown its supprt. The UDAG Program has cost the Federal Government a total of $3.9 billion over the last 9 years while leveraging $23.7 billion in private funding for economic development. It has also been responsible for creating 513,000 new jobs, helping to retain 124,000 jobs, and providing 429,000 construction jobs. We must show our support again. We must act within 30 days to override the referral.

We don't have much time, because HUD has announced that it will not process grant applications from small cities that have just been submitted. One of the small cities in my district had just completed and submitted an application, only to read in the newspaper that HUD would refuse to consider it, in light of the pending deferral of funds. I would point out to my colleagues that most small cities with limited staff and resources make a tremendous commitment in staff time and consultants' fees just to plan a project and submit the extensive application.

Shortly, I'll be introducing a resolution to override the deferral, and I ask for the support of my colleagues.

PROTECTION AND ADVOCACY FOR MENTALLY ILL INDIVIDUALS ACT OF 1985

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 360 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 360

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4055) to assist the States to establish and operate protection and advocacy systems for mentaly ill individuals and to promote family support groups for Alzheimer's disease patients and their families, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. All points of order against the consideration of the bill for failure to comply with the provisions of section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) are hereby waived. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Energy and Commerce, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule by titles instead of by sections, and each title shall be considered as having been read. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except on motion to recommit. After the passage of H.R. 4055, the Committee on Energy and Commerce shall be discharged from the further consideration of the bill S. 974, and it shall then be in order in the House to move to strike out all after the enacting clause of the said Senate bill and to insert in lieu thereof the provisions contained in H.R. 4055 as passed by the House.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAZZOLI). The gentleman from California [Mr. BEILENSON] is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield the customary 30 minutes for purposes of debate only to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT] and pending that I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 360 is the rule providing for consideration of H.R. 4055, a bill to assist the States in establishing and operating protection advocacy systems for mentally ill individuals and to promote support groups for Alzheimer's disease patients and their families.

House Resolution 360 is an open rule, providing for 1 hour of general debate to be equally divided between the chairman and the ranking minority member from the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

The rule also provides for consideration of the bill for amendment by titles rather than sections.

The rule provides for one motion to recommit. It provides for a motion to strike the contents of S. 974, a similar bill passed by the Senate, and insert in lieu thereof the provisions of H.R. 4055, as passed by the House.

Finally, the rule would waive section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act. Section 402(a) prohibits consideration of legislation authorizing enactment of new budget authority if that legislation has not been reported by May 15, preceding the start of the fiscal year in which it becomes effective.

Because H.R. 4055 is an authorization for fiscal year 1986, it also, I should say, covers fiscal years 1987 and 1988, it requires a section 402(a) waiver.

I would like to point out, Mr. Speaker, that the waiver is technical in nature, because Congress has already voted to repeal the section 402(a) authorization reporting requirement.

The point of order against consideration of authorizations which have not been reported by May 15 was repealed by the Balanced Budget and Emergency Deficit Control Act of 1985, but its effective date was delayed until February 2, next week. Because it was anticipated that this bill would be considered by the House before February 2, the Rules Committee included the section 402(a) waiver in the rule.

The bill for which the Rules Committee has recommended this rule addresses the very serious problem of abuse affecting the mentally ill. H.R. 4055 would provide for the same kind of assistance for institutionalized mentally ill patients as that which is now available for mentally disabled patients. It would do that by expanding the mandate of State protection and advocacy agencies to include services for the mentally ill.

Very modest funding for the expansion has already been appropriated for fiscal year 1986.

In addition, H.R. 4055 establishes family support groups for Alzheimer's patients and their families. It creates a national network for coordination and the exchange of information among them.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the adoption of House Resolution 360.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this rule makes in order the consideration of H.R. 4055, a bill to assist the States in establishing and operating protection and advocacy systems for the mentally ill, and to promote family support groups for Alzheimer's disease patients and their families.

The bill made in order by this rule is not the same bill which was reported by the Energy and Commerce Committee, H.R. 3492. However, the text is the same except for technical corrections to eliminate an entitlement feature of the bill which would have violated the Budget Act. The original bill unintentionally would have entitled States to these funds, regardless of appropriations levels. This was called to the attention of the Energy and Commerce Committee by the Budget Committee, and the new bill, H.R. 4055, was introduced on January 27 to remedy that budgetary defect.

This rule does waive section 402(a) of the Budget Act against consideration of the bill. Section 402(a) prohibits the consideration of legislation not reported by May 15 preceding the start of the fiscal year in which it takes effect. Since H.R. 4055 would take effect in the current fiscal year and obviously was not reported prior to last May 15, the waiver is necessary to even consider the bill.

Why is it necessary to waive section 402(a) of the Budget Act against this bill? Didn't we repeal the May 15 reporting deadline for authorizations in Gramm-Rudman?

Yes, Gramm-Rudman repeals the present section 402(a) May 15 reporting deadline, but the effective date for that repeal is February 1, 1986 which is 2 days away. So this waiver is still necessary this week.

There are other features of this rule which I want to call to the attention of my colleagues. First, the rule provides for 1-hour of general debate. Second, the bill will be read for amendment by titles rather than by sections under the 5-minute rule. Third, this is a completely open rule, and any and all germane amendments may be considered. Fourth, the regular motion to recommit is provided for. And finally, the rule provides for a hookup with the Senate companion bill, S. 974, following passage, to facilitate going to conference.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 4055 authorizes approximately $33 million over 3 years to assist States in establishing protection and advocacy programs for mentally ill individuals, comparable to the services already provided the mentally retarded. This legislation is the result of committee findings that the mentally ill have been subjected to serious abuse and neglect in institutions, including physical, emotional and sexual abuse.

While States would not be required to establish such programs, the bill would take away their existing alcohol, drug abuse, and mental health block grant funds if they do not. And States which already have such advocacy and protection programs for the mentally ill could only use the money authorized by this bill to supplement, not supplant, State moneys.

Mr. Speaker, the nearly identical bill, H.R. 3492, was reported from the Energy and Commerce Committee by a vote of 17 to 7. There are dissenting views by 11 members objecting to the creation of a new, $33-million program.

Notwithstanding this opposition, however, and the opposition of the administration, a representative of the minority testified in support of an open rule so that there will be an opportunity to perfect this piece of legislation. Since this is a completely open rule, I know of no opposition to proceeding to the consideration of the bill itself, and therefore urge adoption of the rule.

Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

□ 1135

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, the two gentlemen who have spoken on this rule have made a point of telling the House that we are, in fact, waiving the Budget Act again. Now you would think that after going through the exercise at the end of last year where we were attempting to impose discipline on the House of Representatives with regard to our budgeting practices that someone might think that the House had reformed its way a little bit. But here we come with the first spending bill of the new session, and what do we have? We have a rule before us that waives the Budget Act.

Oh, now, there are all kinds of explanations as to why this waiver is in there. It is in there only because as of 2 days from now we are going to throw out that section of the rules anyhow, so what does it hurt to have a little bit of budget waiver right now?

Well, here is the problem with this one: What we are waiving is the Budget Act as relates to a brand new program. We are not talking about something here where we have already got spending within the budget, and we have got authorization in the budget. We have a brand new program here. Here is one more add-on program, and what we are doing is waiving the Budget Act in order to get to the new program.

What does our illustrious Budget Committee think about this, the protectors of our budget? Here is a letter from the chairman of the Budget Committee where he indicates that a poll of the members of the Budget Committee indicates that a majority would support a waiver of section 402(a) of the Budget Act in order to permit consideration of H.R. 4055, this brand new program.

That is the problem. We simply do not have any discipline in this body. There simply is not any desire whatsoever to stop spending money.

We said at the end of last year that we want to move on a trend toward a balanced budget. That was a great policy statement, evidently, that very few of the majority of the Members who voted for that particular provision really believe in, because when it comes now to spending more money we are waiving the Budget Act and bringing the spending to the floor.

I would submit that this rule should be turned down because of the Budget Act waiver in it. I would submit that we ought to make certain that the program that we are about to consider, if this rule is approved, complies with what we committed ourselves to last year, and that is movement toward a balanced budget. To do less would be a travesty.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. GAYDOS] for a unanimous-consent request.

REPORT PROVIDING AMOUNTS FROM CONTINGENT FUND OF HOUSE FOR EXPENSES OF INVESTIGATIONS AND STUDIES BY STANDING AND SELECT COMMITTEES IN SECOND SESSION OF 99TH CONGRESS

Mr. GAYDOS, from the Committee on House Administration, submitted a privileged report (Rept. No. 99-467) providing amounts from the contingent fund of the House for the expenses of investigations and studies by standing and select committees of the House in the 2d session of the 99th Congress, which was referred to the House Calendar and ordered to be printed.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume to conclude my remarks on this rule, if the gentleman has no further requests for time.

I think I would like, if I might, to take a minute or two to just repsond very briefly to the comments of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER]. I think the Members of the House deserve to hear a response to the point that the gentleman from Pennsylvania has made.

We, in fact, are waiving section or propose to waive section 402(a). We have done that on a good many other earlier occasions, and as we pointed out, both the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. LOTT], and myself, that particular purpose of section 402 has been amended out by the Gramm-Rudman legislation, so it will not be before us again.

But I think it useful just to spend a moment or two, as I have suggested, to speak to the Members of the House about this particular matter.

Section 402(a) point of order which we did propose to waive in this particular rule was never a budget control to begin with. There is no way that waiving it can be in any way construed to be breaking the budget.

Section 402(a) point of order was included in the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 as a way of encouraging earlier action on the authorization bills so that appropriation bills could be considered more expeditiously. Authorization bills, of course, do not directly affect the budget because they only authorize the spending that must be approved later on through the appropriation process.

I would like to point out to the gentleman from Pennsylvania, to whom I will yield in just a moment or two, that money for this particular program already has been appropriated, already is in an approved appropriations bill by this House.

I might mention at this point that repeal of section 402(a) which was included in the balanced budget legislation at the recommendation of members of the Rules Committee and other committees was intended to promote consideration of authorization bills well in advance of the fiscal year for which they first would be effective. We felt that the May 15 reporting date, and deadline which has been in effect now for about 11 years, had actually become counterproductive to having authorization bills considered on the floor early in the year, prior to appropriation bills being taken up. So over the years members of the Rules Committee and others have observed that authorizing committees tended to wait until the May 15 reporting deadline to report the bulk of their bills, and then at that time there is very little time left to act on those authorizations prior to the consideration of appropriation bills as is ordinarily required by the Rules of the House of Representatives.

The House Rules Committee anticipates that as the House becomes accustomed to the new strict deadline for passage of appropriation bills which is included again at the behest of the Rules Committee in the Gramm-Rudman legislation, passed by both Houses and signed into law by the President just a couple of months ago, that authorization committees will find it is in their own best interest to report their bills as early in the year as possible in order to ensure that there will be adequate time to consider them on the floor prior to May and June, when under the new rules, and the new schedule, the appropriation bills are required to be taken up.

For the sake of orderly scheduling and to avoid the need to waive House rules prohibiting consideration of unauthorized appropriations, the Rules Committee strongly urges that authorization committees comply with the spirit of the new budget timetable by reporting as early in the year as possible their bills, and that means well in advance of the May 15 deadline, which unfortunately, has become the date at which most authorization bills are being reported, and that was too late to take them up in the proper course.

But I would say again to my friend from Pennsylvania that this has nothing to do with overspending, this has nothing to do with breaking the budget. There was the waiving of a deadline, of a deadline rule.

But with respect to the spending the gentleman quite properly refers to, this Member would assure his friend from Pennslyvania that really that has no relevance.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BEILENSON. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman for yielding and I think that it is an interesting interpretation of the Budget Act as it now stands. It differs a little from my own.

First of all, obviously we do not take this bill up if we do not have the waiver, so, therefore, it does have impact on the budget, because you could not authorize the spending that, therefore, could be appropriated if you did not have the waiver. So you do prevent spending from taking place if you do not grant the waiver.

Second, I would say to the gentleman that the reason for the May 15 date was somewhat broader than what he suggested, and that the intent was to assure that authorization bills were in place before we completed the budget process so that we would know those things that were likely to come up as a part of the legislative schedule so that the budget process could reflect everything that was potentially authorized. That does, in fact, relate directly to the budget process, and it is something that we have regularly waived.

Yes, indeed, the gentleman is absolutely correct in suggesting that the authorizing committees have failed to meet that deadline and have attempted to push the deadline. The gentleman is absolutely right. Why have they done that? Because they knew doggone well when they went to the Rules Committee they were going to get a waiver, and it is amazing to me that the waiver was never really a point until I and some other Members started to come to this floor and raise the point that a budget waiver was a problem and we ought not to be waiving the Budget Act. But all of a sudden, then we had to find some way to repeal it. So in the dark corners of the deliberations of Gramm/Rudman, one of the disciplinary tools that they took out was to take out this particular provision because it had become a problem on the House floor for Members to have to stand up and defend why they were waiving the Budget Act. So we got rid of that particular one.

I would suggest to the gentleman that it was not an important feature. It is one that I regret is being dropped, but the fact is that we are losing one more way of trying to discipline spending around here and continuing the spending practices of this place that have driven us to $200 billion deficits.

I thank the gentleman very much for yielding.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to reaffirm and strengthen what my friend from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] said. We just finished a very successful and very important meeting of the House Administration Committee where, in fact, we took the Gramm-Rudman process very seriously, and I hope that the chairman and the ranking member will be bringing that report to the floor next week.

I think it is important to recognize that there are people in this place who are actually going through the difficult process of controlling spending. I think it is important to recognize that Members are now dealing with their own budget for their offices, for their personnel, and are actually cutting spending and trying to move toward a balanced budget.

□ 1145

It is particularly important, then, that we somehow get the message across to the Rules Committee that it ought to quit writing rules that are designed to obfuscate and confuse the process. To get up and say that authorizations really do not matter when you get to Appropriations and that the procedure really does not matter, and that somehow if you vote yes on this it does not mean anything later on, and then turn later and say, "Gosh, I don't know how we got this large deficit. I don't fully understand all those things that Appropriations put in the supplemental or the continuing. I didn't really appreciate all these things, and I can't quite tell you who was doing that, but it all happened somewhere;" is exactly what is wrong with the congressional process.

We Members at large in the Committee of the Whole and on the floor of the House are going to have to spend all year disciplining our committees, because every committee has a tendency to protect its turf and its interests.

Unfortunately, the Committee on Rules is going to be used time after time to write obscure rules with complex provisions that mean in effect, "Here's one more place to get wiggle room."

So I would urge Members to vote no; I think it is appropriate to insist on rules that cease to waive the Budget Act; I think it is important that we enforce the Budget Act; and if there are systematic problems with the Budget Act, then let us change the Budget Act.

But to again and again and again let a handful of people in the smallest committee room on the Hill, hidden away in an obscure part of the Capitol decide once again to write paragraphs that do not quite make sense to the average Member is just the wrong way to start this year.

I appreciate the distinguished member of the Rules Committee yielding me this time.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 240, nays 134, not voting 60, as follows:

Mr. LEATH of Texas changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. MAZZOLI and Mr. McKINNEY changed their votes from "nay" to "yea."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MAZZOLI). Pursuant to House Resolution 360 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 4055.

□ 1209

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4055) to assist the States to establish and operate protection and advocacy systems for mentally ill individuals and to promote family support groups for Alzheimer's disease patients and their families, with Mr. HUGHES in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the first reading of the bill is dispensed with.

Under the rule, the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] will be recognized for 30 minutes and the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNE-

MEYER] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, let me begin by clarifying the bill that is before us. Last week, the Committee on the Budget contacted the Commerce Committee staff to alert us to a technical error in the bill H.R. 3492. As drafted, that bill would have given States an entitlement to Federal funds, regardless of appropriations levels. Clearly this was not the intent of anyone on the Commerce Committee.

The bill, H.R. 4055, which is before us today is the exact text of H.R. 3492, with the technical corrections needed to prevent the creation of an entitlement. No substantive changes have been made. The legislative history and report of H.R. 3492 are clearly intended to be used in connection with this bill, and that is the Commerce Committee's understanding and intent.

Now if I may, I would like to describe the substance of the bill.

Last year, the Subcommittee on the Handicapped of the Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee conducted an investigation and a series of hearings revealing startling and serious abuse and neglect of mentally ill people in institutions. It is a difficult topic, one that most people would rather not consider. But physical abuse, sexual assault, and simple neglect occur in public and private settings, in good hospitals and in poor ones.

Such situations are made worse by the nature of mental illness. Seriously mentally ill people are often unable to protect themselves from even the most severe abuse. Sometimes their illness prevents them from looking after their own safety.

Similar problems have existed in the treatment of the mentally retarded, but for 10 years now, the Federal and State Governments have sponsored a program for the protection and advocacy of these disabled people. This program has been successful and well-received. It has been widely accepted and used by disabled people, their families, and service providers, and has been well-reviewed by the States, the GAO, and the Reagan administration.

The bill before us today would expand the mandate of the protection and advocacy agencies beyond their current services to the mentally retarded to include services for the mentally ill. Similar legislation has already passed the Senate. The very modest funding for this expansion was included in the appropriations act (Public Law 99-178) for this year, pending approval of this authorization, and is within the approved budget ceiling for this function.

The bill also includes a provision offered by my colleague from Florida, Mr. BILIRAKIS, to give the Secretary of HHS specific authority to promote the establishment of family support groups for family members of people with Alzheimer's disease. This is a particular devastating illness—for both family and patient—and I believe that such support services can give assistance that no other groups are providing.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, in 1981 the country embarked on a new means of establishing a provision in our law for health care for the people of this country. We inaugurated a program for block grants, whereby the Federal Government would, through the medium of block grants, establish authority for a State to use Federal dollars for such needs in the States as were deemed appropriate by the States.

We believe that program has worked very well. Nearly 40 small Federal public health programs, similar to the one now being considered by the House, were consolidated into block grants.

Consistent with that philosophy, in 1984, by an act of this body, we specifically authorized the States to develop programs for protecting the status of mentally ill people located in the States of the Union. Five States to date have acted pursuant to that legislation and have programs in place: Michigan, Rhode Island, Maryland, North Carolina, and New York. Those States believe that individuals in their States deserve the type of protection this legislation affords. Any yet what does this bill do? It creates a new Federal program at variance with the whole thrust of the Block Grant Program which has been a part of the Reagan administration's philosophy in dealing with health care matters and essentially says, "We the Federal Government believe that this need is so important that we are going to authorize $33 million over 3 years for this new program."

This program, the new one that is presented in this bill, raises a very simple question for all of us to consider: How high must the annual deficit reach, or how big must the national debt get, before somebody in this place stops trying to add new programs?

Apparently in the eyes of the proponents of this legislation, a national deficit of $200 billion is not high enough and a national debt of $1.8 trillion is not big enough to deter them. I again ask the question: How high must the annual deficit get before they stop adding new programs?

Since we are dealing with the subject of mentally ill people, I cannot help but observe that somebody watching this process must question at times the mental health of the people involved in the legislative process who would seriously consider adding a new program, costing $11 million a year, in the face of a $200 billion deficit.

We are engaged today in a very serious debate in this House as to where we can find $11.7 billion of reductions in fiscal year 1986 in order to comply with Gramm-Rudman. Yet notwithstanding that quest of reducing spending by that modest amount, this bill proposes to add a new program on top of everything that exists. Some of us believe that this new program does, in fact serve a noble purpose. Who can be against improving the status of the mentally ill and the mental health facilities of America? I am not against that. It certainly would improve their lives because I am sure some of them, somewhere, are being abused. But I think if we have learned one thing about the expansion of the liberal welfare state in this country, we have learned that we cannot correct every evil in America through the medium of Federal tax dollars because if we seek to do that we are goig to put ourselves right into bankruptcy. And here again is an example of those who really have no concern about where this drive for national bankruptcy is leading us through the medium of adding yet another new program.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. PEPPER], the very distinguished chairman of the Committee on Rules.

Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend my distinguished colleague, the Honorable HENRY A. WAXMAN, for bringing to the floor H.R. 4055, a bill to assist the States in establishing protection and advocacy systems for mentally ill individuals. The measure would also require that the Department of Health and Human Services promote the establishment of family support groups to help Alzheimer's patients and their families.

Mr. WAXMAN and I agree that, while the bill certainly recognizes the devastating burden borne by the families of those afflicted by Alzheimer's disease, it will not attempt to demonstrate how the Nation might begin to treat the Alzheimer's patient in a cost-effective and humane manner. I have introduced legislation, H.R. 524, which would accomplish that objective and which, during the consideration of the rule on H.R. 4055, Mr. WAXMAN assured me would get full and fair consideration by his subcommittee at the earliest possible time.

I would also like to commend Mr. WAXMAN for joining me as one of the principal cosponsors of H.R. 524, a bill to establish 20 regional centers for the treatment of Alzheimer's disease and related disorders. The bill also enjoys the support of 160 Members of the House of Representatives, including the ranking minority member of our Subcommittee on Health and Long-Term Care, the Honorable RALPH REGULA; the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Health and the Environment, Committee on Energy and Commerce, the Honorable EDWARD R. MADIGAN; the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means' Subcommittee on Health, the Honorable FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK; the chairman of the House Select Committee on Aging, the Honorable EDWARD R. ROYBAL; the ranking minority member of the House Select Committee on Aging, the Honorable MATTHEW J. RINALDO; the chairman of the Aging Committee's Subcommittee on Human Services, the Honorable MARIO BIAGGI; the chairman of the Aging Committee's Subcommittee on Housing and Consumer Interests, the Honorable DON BONKER; and the ranking minority member of the Aging Committee's Subcommittee on Housing and Consumer Interests, the Honorable JOHN PAUL HAMMERSCHMIDT. A companion measure, S. 174, has been introduced in the Senate by the Honorable ALBERT GORE, JR.

Alzheimer's disease was barely known outside medical circles 20 years ago, but today we recognize it as one of the cruelest and most widespread of illnesses. In 1983, my Subcommittee on Health and Long-Term Care held the first congressional hearing on Alzheimer's, that terrible monster which depersonalizes its victims, robbing them of their humanity, their emotions, and their ability to think. In that hearings, we were shocked to discover that most of the burden of the disease, financial as well as emotional, is borne by the families of those afflicted. Nowhere else in our society are individual citizens left so unassisted and exposed to the hazards of a catastrophic illness. Subsequent hearings, in Washington and around the country, have confirmed that sad fact, revealing that Federal coverage under Medicare and veterans' health programs is minimal, and private assistance and other health insurance policies are practically nonexistent. After our hearings, I determined that the Federal Government needed to take the lead in assisting the 1.2 to 4 million Americans suffering with Alzheimer's, and to establish a model for appropriate, compassionate and cost-effective treatment. The broad bipartisan support of H.R. 524 indicates that my House colleagues share this view.

In effect, H.R. 524 would not create a new benefit or entitlement under the Medicare Program. Rather, it calls for the continued research and testing of a new approach in the treatment of Alzheimer's patients at 20 centers throughout the United States. These centers would utilize existing sources of funds available under Medicare and Medicaid and other health programs for Alzheimer's disease and demonstrate the cost effectiveness of maintaining the Alzheimer's victim in the home, thereby delaying more costly institutionalization.

I commend Chairman WAXMAN for his tireless effort to assist mentally ill individuals, who are so sorely in need of protection and advocacy. H.R. 4055 is indeed a landmark provision worthy of the support of the Congress, and I am pleased that the chairman has included in that bill a provision for Alzheimer's support groups in his package.

I know that Mr. WAXMAN believes, as I do, that the time has come to recognize and begin to address the enormous problem of Alzheimer's disease. I sincerely hope that we can move forward to add 20 regional centers for Alzheimer's disease, as they will provide invaluable information on requirements for treatment of this illness and enable us to save considerable resources by postponing institutionalization.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MCKINNEY].

Mr. MCKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the measure currently before us, the Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Persons Act. I commend my friend and colleague, Senator LOWELL WEICKER for conducting a 9-month investigation in his Subcommittee on the Handicapped which resulted in a bill to stop the abuse and neglect of mentally ill persons. I also commend my colleagues, Mr. WAXMAN and Mr. BILIRAKIS, for holding hearings on this issue and producing a fine bill for the House to consider.

The bill before us today establishes a long overdue protection and advocacy system to prevent the abuse and neglect of the mentally ill. For years I have been saying that public policy on the chronic mentally ill has gone awry, resulting in a homeless population of which 30 to 50 percent are chronic mentally ill persons. As a result, I have continually offered legislation aimed at preventing the reckless dumping of patients out of institutions and onto our streets with no followup care or treatment. It is because of my years of work with mental health advocates that I later will be offering an amendment to today's bill which serves to fine-tune a good measure.

H.R. 3492 correctly recognizes that the "failure to establish or carry out an appropriate individual program plan or treatment or discharge plan for a mentally ill individual," is neglect. While this definition of neglect has merit, it needs to be fine tuned. I have worked for years with mental health advocates to establish the term "optimum therapeutic setting" when determining the most appropriate treatment or discharge plan for each individual patient. Current treatment and discharge plans too often are based solely on "least restrictive setting" criteria which does not take into consideration a patient's individual needs.

In its report the committee stated that it was "especially concerned that the State Protection and Advocacy agencies protect mentally ill persons against unplanned or unsuccessful discharge or dumping." My amendment would insure this by clarifying once and for all that the "optimum therapeutic setting" allows a patient's clinical and individual needs to determine the best rehabilitative environment. Without my amendment the "appropriate individual program plan" under H.R. 3492 may follow in the current interpretation of "least restrictive setting" and the problem of dumping would continue.

Mr. Chairman, for many, sleeping on the streets isn't a choice, it is a circumstance imposed upon them by public policy which has failed. It is my hope that this bill and my amendment will serve to close the legal loophole that allows mentally ill patients to fall through the cracks in our mental health system and wind up homeless. Once again, I commend the sponsors of this much-needed legislation for their fine efforts and urge your support of my amendment to make a good bill even better.

□ 1220

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI].

Mr. BIAGGI. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in very strong support of H.R. 3492, the protection and advocacy for Mentally Ill Individuals Act. I commend the Subcommittee on Health which produced this important legislation and especially its distinguished chairman, HENRY WAXMAN and the esteemed gentleman from Florida [Mr. BILIRAKIS]. I believe passage of H.R. 3492 will mark an important and progressive step forward as we intervene on behalf of two of our society's more vulnerable groups—the mentally ill in institutions—and the families of victims of Alzheimer's disease.

This bill has two separate and distinct parts, both of which I support. The first and main part of this legislation would authorize a total of $33 million for a program to help States establish protection and advocacy systems for mentally ill individuals who have been institutionalized. This is not only essential—it is terribly long overdue.

I have a deep, longstanding and abiding interest in this issue. It goes back to my early days in Congress. The year was 1971. Together with a then highly respected local news reporter, Geraldo Rivera, we uncovered serious abuses of mentally ill and retarded persons at the Willowbrook Facility on Staten Island and the Letchworth Village in Rockland County. The horrors of mistreatment, abuse and neglect shocked the New York community. It did produce some basic reforms in the way individuals were treated; but it also led to a process by which these institutions were more closely monitored by State officials, as well as advocates, which lies behind what is in this bill today.

Several years later, as an attorney, I went to court to fight pro bond for the rights of a young institutionalized woman by the name of Adrienne Renelli. Once again, the issue was abuse and neglect of a mentally ill person in an institution. We emerged from court with a basic and new bill of rights for the institutionalized mentally ill.

Yet the harsh reality of the situation is this. If we were treating our mentally ill in institutions as they should be—there would be no need for us to be here working on this legislation. It is obvious that in too many places, we have seen the mentally ill relegated into second class citizenry status. It is obvious that in too many States in our Nation, we find wholescale warehousing of mentally ill individuals in institutions. In too many States, the cries and appeals of mistreated mentally ill persons go unheeded, or run up against an unsympathetic bureaucracy.

What I consider to be a critical feature of this legislation is the provision that says States are required to certify that they have, or will establish, a protection and advocacy program in order to continue to receive alcohol, drug abuse, and mental health administration block grant funds. It is the height of crudeness for the Federal Government to provide funds to States which do not even have this minimum program of protection and advocacy for its mentally ill. To continue to provide funds is tantamount to subsidizing continued abuse.

The bill does not impose on States any difficult procedure to implement these programs. It states clearly that the protection and advocacy system established by States under the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act should be used for this purpose. It further would allow the few States that have an existing State mental health protection and advocacy system to use any such system for this purpose. In other words—there is no excuse for States not to put these reforms in order.

It is vitally important that, under this bill, in order for a State to be eligible to receive funds under this bill, a State system must have authority to investigate abuse and neglect—and to pursue remedies on behalf of mentally ill persons. The system must be independent of agencies that provide treatment. The system must have access to records, and issue an annual report.

In light of the fact that the Senate has already passed a similar bill, it is essential that we act today and pass H.R. 3492. Consider what even 1 day of delay means. In that 1 day there are mentally ill persons being abused and neglected in institutions. The question is how long do we want to wait before we act. This is a vote of conscience—and a vote to curb the unconscionable mistreatment of mentally ill persons in institutions.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 7 minutes to the gentleman from Flordia [Mr. BILIRAKIS].

Mr. BILIRAKIS. I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Mr. Chairman, I also wanted to take a few minutes today to draw the attention of my colleagues to the importance of the bill before us. Simply stated, H.R. 4055 addresses assistance and protection for people who often cannot protect or help themselves.

H.R. 4055, the Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Individuals Act of 1985, sponsored by Chairman WAXMAN and myself, is supported by the American Psychiatric Association, the American Psychological Association, the Association for Retarded Citizens, the National Alliance for the Mentally Ill, the National Mental Health Association, the United Cerebral Palsy Association, as well as a number of other professional patient and family organizations. Its purposes are to: First, assist States to establish and operate protection and advocacy systems for mentally ill persons; and second, promote family support groups for Alzheimer's disease patients and their families.

Recent studies have uncovered alarming statistics of significant abuse and neglect of the mentally ill in residential facilities throughout the Nation. As a member of the Energy and Commerce Committee, I have personally heard witnesses, some former patients themselves, attest their experience or familiarity with the abuse—physical, emotional, and sexual—and neglect of mentally ill persons in institutions, and those recently discharged from institutions.

No one recognizes the constraints of our deficit situation more than I, nor more strongly feels that every appropriate and conceivable effort be made to reduce it. However, certain problems, especially those in the health area, transgress budgetary concerns and require immediate attention and compassion. This is especially true in the area of protection and advocacy services, for there is no doubt but they are needed in order to investigate and prevent further instances of abuse and neglect from occurring.

P&A services already exist for the developmentally disabled. They have been a condition of a State's receipt of funds under the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act since 1975. This program has been widely accepted and used by disabled people, their families, and service providers. It has also been well reviewed by the States, the GAO, as well as by the Reagan administration. H.R. 4055 would provide modest increases in authorizations to expand the mandate of these existing protection and advocacy services for the mentally ill as well.

Senator WEICKER has sponsored similar legislation, S. 974, which passed the Senate by voice vote. Funding for this program is already included in the appropriations act for this year that was signed by the President on December 12. Furthermore, the funding is within the approved budget ceiling for this function.

H.R. 4055 requires States to certify, by the beginning of fiscal year 1987, that an advocacy program has been established or that one will be established in order to continue to receive an allocation from the Alcohol, Drug Abuse and Mental Health Administration [ADAMHA] block grant funds. I urge my colleagues to support the protection and advocacy services of H.R. 4055 and thereby speak for those who are unable to speak or defend themselves from the abuse and neglect of others.

The second purpose of H.R. 4055 is to promote the establishment of family support groups for victims of Alzheimer's disease and their families. We all know about the horrors of Alzheimer's disease and how it suddenly grips a normal and productive life and ravages it until there is neither personality, mentality, nor humanity left in its victim, Although there is little we can do to help victims of this deadly disease as it progresses, we can provide the necessary emotional hand to victims in the early stages and, especially, to the families who are forced to watch a loved one literally deteriorate in mind and spirit.

Support groups have already proven successful and beneficial on the private level, as demonstrated by the pioneer work of the Alzheimer's Disease and Related Disorders Association [ADRDA], because they offer the victim and his family the opportunity to talk with others who are going through the same unfortunate experiences with Alzheimer's disease.

H.R. 4055 calls upon the Secretary of Health and Human Services [HHS] to promote the establishment of a national network of family support groups in university medical centers and in other appropriate health care facilities receiving Federal funds from the Secretary. These support groups will provide, without cost, educational, emotional, and practical support to help individuals cope with the deadly disorder. ADRDA has already done much fine work with support groups, and it is my hope that the Secretary of HHS will also consult with this organization on the establishment of the support groups called for in H.R. 4055.

In summation, then, H.R. 4055 provides for mechanisms which will protect a vulnerable population of citizens against mistreatment. No one in our society should have to be subjected to any unethical or inhumane treatment, least of all patients who are in mental health facilities to receive professional care and attention, and the expansion of protection and advocacy services to cover the mentally ill will help ensure against instances of abuse and neglect in the future.

Finally H.R. 4055 contains provisions which will assist yet another vulnerable population—the 2.5 million victims of Alzheimer's disease and the family members who are often victimized as much as the patient himself. The support groups which this legislation proposes will help this group of unfortunate victims come to grips with the reality of the disease with which they or their loved one has been afflicted. Nothing can compare with the emotional trauma such people go through, and the support group will offer them the opportunity to share with others who have been there and understand while simultaneously offering them practical information and advice on the disease known as Alzheimer's. The support groups which H.R. 4055 proposes will offer invaluable services while doing nothing to add to our deficit situation since the support groups will be established in facilities already receiving Federal HHS funds. I might remind my colleagues at this time, that the bill was reported out of the Health and Environment Subcommittee by a vote of 12 to 1 and out of the full committee of Energy and Commerce by a vote of 17 to 7. I hope all my colleagues will support passage of H.R. 4055 and help both groups of vulnerable victims.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to a very important member of our subcommittee, the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LUKEN].

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Chairman, I join in the applause for the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] for successfully advocating and steering this bill to its culmination here on the House floor, and I rise in enthusiastic support of this badly needed legislation.

I share the concerns which have been expressed for the plight of the mentally ill and the urgency of providing them with a program for advocacy and protection against abuse and neglect from their caretakers and from society as a whole. While we pride ourselves as a nation dedicated to the principle of individual freedom and opportunity for those less fortunate than us, it is almost daily that we hear of abuse to the elderly, to children, and to those who are least able to stand up for their own rights.

Fortunately, in my State of Ohio we have in place a very competent agency, the Ohio Legal Rights Service, which has helped uncover some disturbing cases of mismanagement and abuse in State-funded group homes. However, this same agency is also responsible for serving those with developmental disabilities and the mentally retarded, all on a shrinking budget.

The legislation before us today is a step in the right direction, as it will provide additional funds for this agency so that it can better focus its resources and staff on the problems of the mentally ill in my State and other States. Moreover, this legislation will enable those advocacy programs to pursue administrative, legal, and other remedies.

Gramm-Rudman has put the pressure on all Members of Congress to cut spending, but this program is essential and is worthy of our vote. As I mentioned, the Ohio Legal Rights Service is an independent agency to advocate the rights of persons who are mentally disabled and/or mentally ill, but more than half of that agency's budget, all of the OLRS Federal funds, comes from a bill on which this bill was modeled, the Developmentally Disabled Assistance and Bill of Rights Act of 1978.

As our committee report indicates, the protection and advocacy system is anticipated to lower unnecessary use of expensive institutional services, as well as to reduce the need for medical care required by persons who are victims of neglect and physical or sexual abuse.

I intend to offer an amendment to correct the effects of an amendment which was adopted by the committee. This amendment adopted by the committee would further discriminate and limit the protection and advocacy system's ability to advocate for some of the most vulnerable persons termed mentally ill, those who have custodians or trustees. I believe that this protection should be restored. It has been requested by the rights groups in my State. I will offer an amendment to that effect, and I urge support of the bill.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to yield 3 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Ohio [Mr. TRAFICANT].

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Chairman, I would like to begin by commending the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BILIRAKIS] for their efforts in the subcommittee and the committee for its efforts in bringing this legislation forward. I believe the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] has identified himself as an individual who is not only a strong advocate but a learned advocate and one who has made a tremendous impact in this particular field.

My particular background has included work with the mentally ill in my tasks. In 10½ years, in fact, I worked serving drug abusers and also served in the capacity of helping and aiding and abetting those involved with institutionalized problems and those who are mentally ill.

This legislation is basically that. It protects the mentally ill from physical abuse and from sexual abuse and neglect. It will also require States to establish an advocacy program, and certainly that is something that is needed.

I would like to point out to the Members of Congress that the mentally ill whom this affects cannot be here today, and they do not have any powerful lobbies that can be here today on their behalf. We have become their lobbyists, and when I hear individuals talk about a new program and the cost of this program, I look back to a date last year when a $14 billion foreign aid bill passed the House of Representatives on a voice vote.

□ 1240

I am not questioning your vote on that. I am now questioning, though, your priorities.

We today are the lobbyists for those mentally ill who cry out from institution for our support. I think our support should be there.

So I think it is a good program, perhaps, but one that is overdue and one that Congress should put the stamp of approval on and we should endorse and approve here today H.R. 4055 and I commend those Members who brought it forward.

Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the piece of legislation currently before this body, H.R. 4055, Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Individuals.

Today, the United States is faced with one of the most serious domestic economic crisis with which we have had to deal in many a year—the soaring Federal budget deficit. Current estimates peg the deficit at more than $220 billion, an estimate which has increased by more than $48 billion since the passage of the Gramm-Rudman-Hollings Balanced Budget Act. Certainly in the face of this budget crisis, new Federal programs, new Federal spending are not in order.

While I recognize that abuse and neglect of the mentally ill is a serious problem and merits attention, I strongly feel that the Federal Government cannot afford new programs nor the precedent of establishing new programs at this time. Furthermore, the last thing we need to do is to continue to foster dependence by the States on Federal funds.

Although I realize that any Federal funds distributed under this act are to supplement, not supplant, State funds for protection and advocacy services, we do a disservice to States and individuals by promising, through precedent, something which we will not be able to deliver. We should only encourage States to establish programs which they can afford to fund themselves.

Supporters of H.R. 4055 might defend their plea for this new spending by saying that funding for this function, for this year, already is appropriated. This fact coupled with a relatively low level of fund sequestering under Gramm-Rudman for fiscal year 1986 may lead some to believe that authorization of this new program is not such a bad idea.

But, my friends, I ask you to look at this again. What happens in 1987? 1988? and on down the line? I'll tell you what happens. If this bill passes and is signed into law, a new program will not just be authorized, but also initially funded. The precedent will be set; States' expectations for their programs will rise.

The solution is to not establish a new program at all because we cannot afford it. A 3-year authorization of $33 million may seem like small potatoes when we speak of a $220 billion deficit. But as we are all aware, millions add up to billions and we might as well cut our losses now.

Moreover, Congress soon will be faced with budget cuts of from $40 to $70 billion. Colleagues, that's a lot of money. If we don't do it, Gramm-Rudman will take effect, as we all know. Each year for the next 4 years, we must scale down the level of Federal involvement in domestic programs. That is inevitable. Let us not mislead ourselves, nor the country, that we can do anything otherwise. For if we continue to authorize new programs, we may grow complacent about the task at hand.

The solution also is to not establish another program which fosters State dependence on Federal funds. Federal funds for State functions will only decrease, not increase, at least for the next several years. Offering up new Federal funding to induce States to start new programs which they may not be able to afford alone is a cruel joke and a hoax.

Furthermore, as had been noted before, States are taking initiative to remedy the situations which lead to neglect and abuse of the mentally ill. I believe that the message should be clear from Washington: States, you are going to have to fully fund any new and necessary programs, therefore you should adopt the appropriate solutions tailored to your particular problems.

I know that supporters of this bill would say, "Abuse and neglect of the mentally ill truly is a national problem. Let's look at the merits of this bill." Well, the merits are there. But it is my firm belief that past focus on merits without enough attention to program cost is what has brought us to the point of holding the gun to our own heads. We must not fail in our fiscal responsibility any longer.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, we have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of our time.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, we yield back the balance of our time.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill will be considered under the 5-minute rule by titles, and each title will be considered as having been read.

The Clerk will designate title I.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be printed in the RECORD and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

The text of the bill is as follows:

H.R. 4055

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

TITLE I—MENTAL HEALTH ADVOCACY

SECTION 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Individuals Act of 1985".

SEC. 102. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this title—

(1) The term "abuse" means an act or failure to act by an employee of a hospital, nursing home, board and care home, or community facility for mentally ill individuals which was performed, or was not performed, in a knowing, reckless, or intentional manner, and which caused, or may have caused, injury to a mentally ill individual, and includes—

(A) the rape or sexual assault of a mentally ill individual;

(B) the striking of a mentally ill individual;

(C) the use of excessive force when placing a mentally ill individual in bodily restraints; and

(D) the use of bodily or chemical restraints on a mentally ill individual which is not in compliance with Federal and State laws and regulations.

(2) The term "eligible system" means the system established in a State under part C of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act to protect and advocate the rights of individuals with developmental disabilities or, if the Governor of the State designates a State mental health protecton and advocacy system as the eligible system for the State, such designated State system. The Governor of a State may designate a State mental health protection and advocacy system as an eligible system under this Act if the State system is in effect within 90 days of the date of the enactment of this Act, provides services throughout the State, meets the requirements of section 103(b), and is principally supported by State funds which have been appropriated by October 1, 1985, for the provision of mental health protection and advocacy services by such systems.

(3) The term "mentally ill individual" means an individual—

(A) for whom a diagnosis of mental illness has been made by a mental health professional qualified under the laws of a State;

(B) who is an inpatient in a hospital or nursing home or a resident in a board and care home or a community facility for mentally ill individuals; and

(C) for whom a legal guardian, conservator, or other legal representative has not been appointed or who is not an inpatient in a State which has in effect a protection and advocacy system similar to the system for which assistance is provided by section 3.

In the case of individuals in a State in which the Governor has made a designation described in paragraph (2), such term means an individual described in only subparagraphs (A) and (B).

(4) The term "neglect" means a negligent act or omission by any person responsible for providing services in a hospital, mursing home, board and care home, or community facility for mentally ill individuals which caused or may have caused injury to a mentally ill individual or which placed a mentally ill individual at risk of injury, and includes the failure—

(A) to establish or carry out an appropriate individual program plan or treatment or discharge plan for a mentally ill individual,

(B) to provide adequate nutrition, clothing, or health care for a mentally ill individual, or

(C) to provide a safe environment for a mentally ill individual.

(5) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(6) The term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

(7) The term "board and care home" means a facility licensed or regulated by a State under section 1616(e) of the Social Security Act.

SEC. 103. PROTECTION AND ADVOCACY SYSTEM.

(a) ALLOTMENTS.—

(1) The Secretary shall make allotments to eligible systems to establish and administer a system—

(A) which meets the requirements of subsection (b), and

(B) which is designed to protect and advocate the rights of mentally ill individuals and investigate incidents of abuse and neglect of mentally ill individuals.

(2) An eligible system which receives funds under an allotment under paragraph (1) may use such funds to enter into contracts with entities for activities under the allotment but may not use such funds to contract with entities which—

(A) provide treatment or services (other than advocacy services) to mentally ill individuals, or

(B) are not public or nonprofit private entities.

(3) If an eligible system which receives an allotment under paragraph (1) is an agency of a State, other agencies of such State may not use more than a total of 5 percent of any such allotment for any fiscal year for administrative expenses related to the system established under the allotment.

(b) SYSTEM REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) A system established in a State under an allotment under subsection (a)(1) to protect and advocate the rights of mentally ill individuals shall—

(A) have the authority to—

(i) investigate incidents of abuse and neglect of mentally ill individuals;

(ii) pursue administrative, legal, and other appropriate remedies to ensure the protection of mentally ill individuals who are inpatients in hospitals, or nursing homes in the State or are residents of board and care homes or community facilities in the State for mentally ill individuals; and

(iii) pursue administrative, legal, and other appropriate remedies on behalf of individuals who were mentally ill individuals and who are residents of the State;

(B) be independent of any agency in the State which provides treatment or services (other than advocacy services) to mentally ill individuals;

(C) have access to hospitals, nursing homes, and board and care homes and community facilities for mentally ill individuals in the State;

(D) have access to all records of—

(i) any individual who is a client of the system if such individual or the guardian of such individual has authorized the system to have such access; and

(ii) any person—

(I) who by reason of the mental or physical condition of such individual is unable to authorize the system to have such access;

(II) who does not have a legal guardian or for whom the legal guardian is the State; and

(III) with respect to whom a complaint has been received by the system or with respect to whom there is reason to believe that such individual has been subject to abuse and neglect;

(E) establish a board—

(i) which will advise the system on policies and priorities to be carried out in protecting and advocating the rights of mentally ill individuals, and

(ii) which shall include attorneys, mental health professionals, individuals from the public who are knowledgeable about mental illness, a provider of mental health services, individuals who have received or are receiving mental health services, and family members of such individuals and at least one-half of the membership of which shall be comprised of individuals who have received or are receiving mental health services or are family members of such individuals;

(F) have an arrangement with the agency of the State which administers the State plan under title XIX of the Social Security Act for the furnishing of the information required by subsection (c); and

(G) on January 1, 1987, and January 1 of each succeeding year, prepare and transmit to the Secretary and the head of the State mental health agency of the State in which the system is located a report describing the activities, accomplishments, and expenditures of the system during the most recently completed fiscal year.

(2) In the case of individuals who were mentally ill individuals, a system may pursue remedies under paragraph (1)(A)(iii) on behalf of such individuals only with respect to matters which occur within 90 days of the date of the discharge of such individual from a hospital, nursing home, board and care home, or community facility for mentally ill individuals.

(3) A system which has access to records which, under Federal or State law, are required to be maintained in a confidential manner by a provider of mental health services, shall, except as provided in paragraph (4), maintain the confidentiality of such records to the same extent as is required of the provider of such services.

(4)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a system which has access to records under paragraph (1)(D) may not disclose information from such records to the individual who is the subject of the information if the mental health professional responsible for supervising the provision of mental health services to such individual has provided the system with a written determination that disclosure of such information to such individual would be detrimental to such person's health.

(B) An individual to whom disclosure of information has been denied under subparagraph (A) may select, or the system, acting on behalf of such person, may select, another mental health professional to review such information and to determine if disclosure of such information would be detrimental to such person's health. If such mental health professional determines, based on professional judgment, that disclosure of such information would not be detrimental to the health of such person, the system may disclose it to such person.

(c) INFORMATION FOR SYSTEMS.—The Secretary and the agency of a State which administers its State plan under title XIX of the Social Security Act shall provide the system in the State established under an allotment under subsection (a) with a copy of each annual survey report and plan of corrections for cited deficiencies made pursuant to titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act with respect to any hospital, nursing home, board and care home or community facility for mentally ill individuals in the State in which such system is located. A report or plan shall be made available within 30 days after the completion of the report or plan.

SEC. 101. ADMINISTRATION OF ALLOTMENTS.

(a) FORMULA.—

(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) and subject to the availability of appropriations under section 105, the Secretary shall allot the amounts available for allotment under section 105 for a fiscal year on the basis of a formula prescribed by the Secretary which is based equally—

(A) on the population of each State in which there is an eligible system, and

(B) on the population of each such State weighted by its relative per capita income.

For purposes of subparagraph (B), the term "relative per capita income" means the quotient of the per capita income of the United States and the per capita income of the State, except that if the State is Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands or the Virgin Islands, the quotient shall be considered to be one.

(2) Notwithstanding the formula for allotments prescribed by paragraph (1) and subject to the availability of appropriations under section 105—

(A) the amount of the allotment of an eligible system in each of the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico shall not be less than $125,000; and

(B) the amount of the allotment of an eligible system in Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or the Virgin Islands shall not be less than $67,000.

(b) REALLOTMENT.—

(1) To the extent that all the funds appropriated under section 105 for a year and available for allotment in such fiscal year are not allotted to eligible systems because—

(A) one or more eligible systems have not submitted an application for an allotment for such fiscal year, or

(B) one or more eligible systems have notified the Secretary that they do not intend to use the full amount of their allotment, the amount which is not so allotted shall be reallotted among the remaining eligible systems.

(2) The amount of an allotment to an eligible system for a fiscal year which the Secretary determines will not be required by the system during the period for which it is available shall be available for reallotment by the Secretary to other eligible systems with respect to which such a determination has not been made.

(3) The Secretary shall make reallotments under paragraphs (1) and (2) on such date or dates as the Secretary may fix (but not earlier than 30 days after the Secretary has published notice of the intention of the Secretary to make such reallotment in the Federal Register). A reallotment to an eligible system shall be made in proportion to the original allotment of such system for such fiscal year, but with such proportionate amount for such system being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum the Secretary estimates such system needs and will be able to use during such period. The total of such reductions shall be similarly reallotted among eligible systems whose proportionate amounts were not so reduced. Any amount so reallotted to an eligible system for a fiscal year shall be deemed to be a part of its allotment under subsection (a) for such fiscal year.

(c) APPLICATION.—No allotment may be made to an eligible system unless an application therefor is submitted to the Secretary. Each such application shall contain—

(1) assurances that amounts paid to such system from an allotment under section 103 will be used to supplement and not to supplant the level of non-Federal funds available to the system to protect and advocate the rights of mentally ill individuals;

(2) assurances that the eligible system for which the application is submitted will have a staff which is trained or being trained to provide advocacy services to mentally ill individuals; and

(3) such other information as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

(d) PAYMENTS.—For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall make payments to each eligible system from its allotment under section 103. Any amount paid to an eligible system for a fiscal year and remaining unobligated at the end of such year shall remain available to such system for the purposes for which it was made for the next fiscal year.

(e) REPORT.—The Secretary shall include in each report required under section 107(c) of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act a separate statement—

(1) describing the activities, accomplishments, and expenditures of systems to protect and advocate the rights of mentally ill individuals supported with payments from allotments under section 103, including—

(A) a specification of the total number of mentally ill individuals served by such systems;

(B) a description of the types of activities undertaken by such systems;

(C) a description of the types of residential facilities for mentally ill individuals with respect to which such activities are undertaken;

(D) a description of the manner in which such activities are initiated; and

(E) a description of the accomplishments resulting from such activities;

(2) describing—

(A) systems to protect and advocate the established rights of mentally ill individuals supported with payments from allotments under this section;

(B) activities conducted by States to protect and advocate such rights;

(C) mechanisms established by residential facilities for mentally ill individuals to protect and advocate such rights; and

(D) the coordination among such systems, activities, and mechanisms; and

(3) making recommendations for activities and services to improve the protection and advocacy of the rights of mentally ill individuals and a description of needs for such activities and services which have not been met by systems established under allotments under section 103.

In preparing the statement required by this subsection, the Secretary shall use and include information submitted to the Secretary in the reports required under section 103(b)(1)(G).

(f) OTHER ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary shall provide training, technical assistance, and evaluation services to eligible systems with respect to activities carried out under an allotment under section 103. In any fiscal year, the Secretary shall obligate for assistance under this subsection an amount equal to 5 percent of the amount appropriated for such fiscal year under section 105.

(g) ADMINISTERING AGENCY.—The Secretary shall carry out this title through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration.

SEC. 105. AUTHORIZATIONS.

For allotments under section 103 and assistance under section 104(f), there are authorized to be appropriated $10,500,000 for fiscal year 1986, $11,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, and $11,525,000 for fiscal year 1988.

SEC. 106. OTHER ALLOTMENTS.

(a) SECTION 1916.—Section 1916(c) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x-4) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(16) There is in the State a protection and advocacy system for mentally ill individuals which meets the requirements of section 103(b) of the Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Individuals Act of 1985.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect October 1, 1986.

TITLE II—FAMILY SUPPORT GROUPS

SEC. 201. ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE.

(a) FAMILY SUPPORT GROUPS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary"), acting through the National Institute of Mental Health, the National Institutes on Health, the National Institute on Aging, and the Administration on Aging, shall promote the establishment of family support groups to provide, without charge, educational, emotional, and practical support to assist individuals with Alzheimer's disease or a related memory disorder and members of the families of such individuals. Such groups shall be established in university medical centers and in other appropriate health care facilities which receive Federal funds from the Secretary and which conduct research on Alzheimer's disease or provide services to individuals with such disease.

(b) NATIONAL NETWORK.—The Secretary shall provide for the establishment of a national network to coordinate the family support groups described in subsection (a).

(c) REPORT.—The Secretary shall report to Congress, not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this section, on family support groups and the network of such groups established pursuant to this section.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WAXMAN

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WAXMAN: Page 3, line 19, insert after "pointed" the following: "unless the legal guardian, conservator, or other legal representative requests the eligible system for the jurisdiction in which such individual is located to treat the individual as a mentally ill individual".

Mr. WAXMAN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

There was no objection.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, during the debate on this bill in the Commerce Committee, an amendment was added to prohibit protection and advocacy agencies from acting on behalf of a person who has a court-appointed guardian with full responsibility for the mentally ill person. It was the goal of that amendment to avoid overlapping responsibilities and interference with a guardian who is already overseen by the court.

That amendment was drafted so broadly, however, that it prevents the guardian himself or herself from asking the protective services for help in caring for the mentally ill person. It is a very strange position in which guardians who actively want to assist their wards are not allowed to use the agencies designed to protect people from abuse and neglect.

My amendment would clarify that a guardian can request assistance from the protective services agency on behalf of the mentally ill person. My amendment does not remove the basic amendment itself from the bill.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to this amendment. We believe it is reasonable. It gives the guardian the ability to ask for the assistance if it is needed. I think it leaves the responsibility with the guardian where it belongs.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. LUKEN

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LUKEN: Page 2, beginning in line 20 strike out "or" and all that follows through "system" in line 7 on page 3.

Page 3, beginning in line 19 strike out "or" and all that follows through "(B)" in line 2 on page 4.

Mr. LUKEN (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Chairman, I mentioned this amendment in the statement in general debate.

During the Commerce Committee discussion of the State's designation of agencies to protect the mentally ill a series of amendments were offered. One has just been covered. That would allow the Governor of a State to recognize an existing State-run advocacy system.

This amendment, offered by the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER], denies funds for inpatient services to a State that has such a similar system.

The effect of these amendments at best is confused. Since the time the bill was reported, State governments and Governors, the Ohio Legal Rights Services, have contacted us and have been calling to see if they could immediately establish or eliminate any of these restrictions, so as not to eliminate these advocacy services in their States.

This amendment would eliminate the central one. This section prevents the protection advocacy not only from representing those who have a legal guardian, but the important part of this amendment is that it prohibits States which have such a system from receiving the protection and advocacy funds under the bill.

The Ohio Legal Rights Services believes that this amendment should be dropped.

I believe this action should be done so that the funds can be restored and that those who are at a disadvantage, those who are least able to protect themselves, will be afforded the protections under this bill.

Mr. Chairman, I urge adoption of the amendment.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. LUKEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I rise in support of the amendment. There are at least six States that have protection and advocacy systems that they have set in place, some within the developmental disability system, some not. What we want to make sure is that they do not have to establish another protection and advocacy system under the law that we would pass should this legislation become law.

We have State-run systems. What this amendment would do is that the State could have that flexibility to use its existing developmental disability system and have it be recognized as fitting within this legislation.

We should stick to the clear principle of the bill and use existing protective services structures. Not to do so would lead to great confusion as to which States are eligible for funds and which are not.

There was a question raised in the committee whether a State that had a protection and advocacy system might well then use Federal dollars to supplant State dollars. Well, we make very clear in this legislation that that would not be permitted. Without the Luken amendment, States would face confusion as they look at this legislation.

This amendment is a needed one to eliminate that confusion and I join in supporting the amendment.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Under existing law, any State that wants to set up a program to assist the mentally ill may do so under the block grant authority which Congress authorized in 1984. Six States, as has been indicated by the Chairman, have set up such a program.

Under the bill before the committee right now, those six States would be allowed to continue those existing programs and could obtain funding from the block grants now available from the Federal Government.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LUKEN] would in effect create an alternative; admittedly a tempting alternative, because it would provide a new access, a new tap route into the Federal Treasury for a new program. Most State Governors, I suspect when asked if they would have an opportunity of allocating money under a block grant to fund the program or where they could get a new tap route into the Treasury, would probably opt for the latter. It is only human nature; but the problem is that we have run out of funds to be tapped.

As indicated earlier, we have a deficit today of over $200 billion. There is no money at the end of that tap.

So I think this amendment should be defeated. The bill should be considered by the committee and by the House in the form that it is now before us.

I think it is a modest change; but it does indicate to those States that have the programs that they are going to have to get the funding for them out of the existing block grants. They will not be able to access a new tap route into the Federal Treasury.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. LUKEN]

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 2, rule XXIII, the Chair announces that he will reduce to a minimum of 5 minutes the period of time within which a vote by electronic device, if ordered, will be taken on the pending question following the quorum call. Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

The following Members responded to their names:

Mr. HYDE changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BIAGGI

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BIAGGI: Page 17, line 23, insert after "disease" the following: "and in community based programs which receive funds from the Administration on Aging."

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, I rise to offer a technical but important amendment to title II—family support groups, of H.R. 4055. Title II would allow the Secretary of Health and Human Services to promote the establishment of family support groups for those families of victims of Alzheimer's disease.

My amendment has been accepted by both the esteemed chairman and my good friend from Florida, Mr. BILIRAKIS, who has done so much work on behalf of this title. My amendment would expand those programs eligible to establish these Alzheimer's family support groups by including "community based programs which receive funds from the Administration on Aging."

I offer this amendment as a means of both recognizing and assisting the work that is already under way in States and localities with respect to family support groups for Alzheimer's victims. A numer of the newest ones are being funded by the Older Americans Act which is run by the Administration on Aging. This is largely due to the provisions of language which I authored, together with my distinguished colleague from Maine, OLYMPIA SNOWE, to the 1984 Older Americans Act.

Under our language, a priority in the use of funds under title III-B supportive services would be provided to those programs providing support services for families of Alzheimer's disease victims. Now, almost 2 years later, these programs have been established by some of the more than 50 State agencies on aging and 660 area agencies on aging who administer the Older Americans Act at the local level. By including them among programs eligible for support under title II of this bill, we compliment their efforts.

It is important to note that the language in title II already calls upon the Secretary of Health and Human Services to act through the NIH and the NIA, as well as AOA, in the promotion and establishment of these family support groups. My amendment would ensure greater coordination in this process by including existing support programs administered by the Administration on Aging through funds under the OAA, specifically titles III and IV.

One such community based program that I know does exist is in my home city of New York. The New York City Alzheimer's Resource Center was established in March of 1984. It is the first municipally sponsored, comprehensive information, referral and counseling service in the Nation. It is operated and funded with both public and private funds. It is operated under the auspices of the New York City Department for the Aging which is an area agency on aging funded by the Older Americans Act. The resource center has as its main goal to link Alzheimer's patients, their families and the service community at large with appropriate programs and services in New York City that can assist those whose lives are affected by Alzheimer's disease. Among its services are guidance to families and caregivers on entitlement programs, residential and institutional placement, alternate housing arrangements, home care services and conducts seminars, including an annual city-wide conference that I have been proud to participate in during the past 3 years.

The fact is—it is imperative that we adopt this legislation to allow for the establishment of these family support groups. Alzheimer's disease today affects more than 2.5 million persons. These are the actual victims of the disease. Yet, there are millions of other Americans who are ravaged by the disease, the families and loved ones of these victims. Both groups are victims and deserve our compassion and our support. We give them both with the adoption of this amendment as well as the entire bill.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BIAGGI. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WAXMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI] to know, and I want my colleagues to know as well, that this is a technical amendment and it is a worthwhile amendment. We urge passage of the amendment.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would advise the gentleman from California that he is too late to reserve a point of order, debate having begun on the amendment. The gentleman did not rise to make a point of order in a timely fashion.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, one of the bewildering aspects of working in the House of Representatives as a Member is to try to understand how the bureaucracy grows and has reached the point that is has today. Well, this bill and the provision that it has in it is an example of how this growth takes place. The bill started out as a plan to establish a new categorical program by the Federal Government for providing what, in effect, is ombudsman service for the mentally ill people in this country. In committee there was a provision added that addressed a very profound problem, namely, Alzheimer's disease.

Members should bear in mind that we have previously adopted a law which says we will have 10 research centers around the country to, hopefully, mitigate suffering from Alzheimer's disease. The funding for those 10 centers is in excess of $50 million per year.

Now this bill contains yet a new effort to mitigate the suffering of Alzheimer's disease, and in the form that it is before us it says that the Secretary of Health and Human Services, acting through the NIH, shall promote the establishment of family support groups, and then it goes on to say, "Such groups shall be established at university medical centers and appropriate health care facilities." This amendment comes along and says, "Well, we also need to have these support groups established in community-based programs which receive funding from the Administration on Aging."

Actually, the reason this Member from California sought to offer a point of order to the offering of the amendment is that in the form that it is before us it proposes to add the language at line 23 after the word "disease." I think it properly belongs, if it is to belong at all, on line 22 after the word "disease."

In the manner that it is offered to the committee, it does not make any sense.

But the point that I seek to establish and share with my colleagues is that we are going to establish these support groups in university medical centers, in appropriate health care facilities, and we are also going to have them, with this amendment, in community-based programs. Now instead of having two agencies competing for this effort we will have a third one. And we know what is going to happen: These three agencies rather than two are going to compete for the development of the program to mitigate suffering from Alzheimer's disease, and of course the three are going to be fighting over what facilities are available, and they will find there is not enough. So the next step in the process that will be added is more funding to provide a bigger pie for these three agencies to fight over rather than just two, all in the name of reducing suffering from Alzheimer's disease, which has been added to a bill dealing with the mentally ill, which is added to a deficit of some $200 billion.

And you wonder just who is mentally ill.

So I think this amendment should be defeated. It is unnecessary. It lays the foundation for more bureaucracy. It duplicates the 10 centers that previously had been authorized to mitigate Alzheimer's disease.

Mr. BIAGGI. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I yield to my friend, the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI].

Mr. BIAGGI. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I think the picture should be made straight. I understand the objection of the gentleman. He is talking about additional bureaucracy. That seems to be the basis for his objection to the bill itself, anything that deals with responding to human needs at this point seems to be met with some objection by the gentleman. And that is his prerogative, of course.

But my amendment deals with the bill itself. Clearly the bill deals with the institutions. My amendment broadens it to deal with family support groups that are in existence now as a result of an amendment that I offered to the Older Americans Act which put in place the need for support service for the families of victims of Alzheimer's. It seems to be inconsistent not to have the family group support services included in this bill.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to engage my colleague from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] in some colloquy on this amendment.

Now I understand that the gentleman is against the bill. He does not think we ought to have the Federal Government setting up protection and advocacy systems to protect the mentally ill. I know he is against that part that says we ought to have support groups for Alzheimer's victims and their families. I disagree, but I could respect his point of view, and I understand that he is going to vote against final passage. But this Biaggi amendment is a technical amendment only. It says if you are going to have support groups for Alzheimer's victims and their families that the Secretary can act through the Administration on Aging as well as the National Institute of Mental Health in helping to establish family support groups.

I am at a loss, Mr. Chairman, to understand why the gentleman would oppose this technical amendment.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAXMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank the gentleman from yielding.

On line 20 of the bill these groups are to be formed in university medical centers, and then again on line 20 they are to be formed in appropriate health care facilities, and this amendment says they are going to be formed also in community-based programs. In other words, the addition of yet another source of where this group is to be formed is, in this Member's opinion, a redundancy.

Mr. WAXMAN. If I may reclaim my time, it does not say it must be done. It is permissive to form an advisory community-based program at these institutions as well. Why would the gentleman object to that, to allowing that to be permitted for an Alzheimer's support group?

Now if you object to Alzheimer's support groups, I understand; vote against the bill. But why be against a technical amendment that is permissive?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman yield?

Mr. WAXMAN. Yes, I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

It is just to simply state to the committee that if we wonder how the bureaucracy grows this is an excellent means of demonstrating just how it happens. The bill in the form before us has two groups where this can be formed, university medical centers and appropriate health care facilities. If we accept the amendment by the gentleman from New York we add another group of people who can get into this process of influencing public policy, community-based programs. It is just another example of how a bureaucracy grows and grows and grows.

Mr. WAXMAN. If I may reclaim my time, Mr. Chairman, I would hope Members will support this amendment. These are programs already established under the Older Americans Act. It is a technical amendment, and we ought to adopt it.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York [Mr. BIAGGI].

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MC KINNEY

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McKINNEY: Page 4, strike out lines 10 through 12 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"(A)(i) in the case of individuals who need to be placed in inpatient mental health facilities, to place such individuals in optimum therapeutic settings and to provide mental health treatment and related support services appropriate to such individuals' level of functioning,

"(ii) in the case of residents of public inpatient mental health facilities who have been inappropriately placed in such facilities, to discharge such residents, and, to the extent appropriate, to place them in optimum therapeutic setting and to provide mental health treatment and related support services appropriate to such individuals' level of functioning,

"(iii) in the case of individuals who are discharged from, or are in need of placement in, inpatient mental health facilities, to inform them of available community-based facilities and programs providing mental health treatment and related support services and to provide them access to a sufficient number of adequately staffed and adequately funded community-based facilities and programs providing mental health and related support services, and

"(iv) to otherwise establish or carry out an appropriate individual program plan or treatment or discharge plan for a mentally ill individual,

Page 4, insert after line 21 the following:

For purposes of clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A), the term "optimum therapeutic setting" means the environment that is least restrictive of an individual's personal liberty and where the care, treatment, habilitation, or rehabilitation is particularly suited to the level of services necessary to properly implement an individual's treatment, habilitation, and rehabilitation. The optimum therapeutic setting for an individual may be a licensed and properly operated State hospital or other public residential care facility.

Mr. McKINNEY (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Connecticut?

There was no objection.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. McKINNEY. I will be brief.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment I am offering is one that I trust my colleagues will find simple and in keeping with the intent of the committee's work. Under the committee bill, one definition of neglect is "the failure to establish an appropriate individual program plan or treatment, or discharge plan for a mentally ill individual." While this definition recognizes the problem of dumping patients out of institutions with no consideration of care and treatment, it should be fine tuned.

My amendment would replace the committee's definition of neglect by stating that the failure to place an individual: be he an inpatient, or an outpatient, in a "optimum therapeutic setting" would be neglect.

Since 1981, I have worked with mental health groups in trying to craft language that would prevent States from discharging patients without providing followup care. It was decided that an "optimum therapeutic setting" definition would make clear to States that the medical community's input must be used along with a person's civil rights when care, treatment and discharge plans are devised. My concern with the committee's language is that "an appropriate individual program plan" still is too vague a concept and does not require the medical input now needed.

This is not a measure that will keep people in institutions, quite the contrary. If a doctor, patient, or family feels an institution is inappropriate, a case can be made to States that a more therapeutic setting must be developed.

My intention is to fine tune the committee's work to ensure that no one can fall through the cracks. Thank you, Mr. Chairman.

□ 1330

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNEY. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. MITCHELL. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I rise to commend him for his amendment.

Those who are dumped into our streets and are homeless represent one of the real tragedies of this Nation, and I think the gentleman's amendment will begin to address at least a part of that problem. I am very happy to support the amendment as fully as I can.

Mr. McKINNEY. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNEY. I yield to the chairman.

Mr. WAXMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment, as I understand it, defines "neglect" to include the failure to place patients in the most appropriate setting and seeks to guarantee patients their legal rights and their best placement. It is an antidumping amendment. It is an elaboration of the purposes of this legislation and will help those people who need placement to get it and help those who should be discharged be discharged. I join in support of this amendment.

Mr. McKINNEY. I thank the gentleman.

POINT OF ORDER

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] persist in his point of order?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I do, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, the bill in the form before us deals with people in mental health facilities in the States of the Union, people who are already there. This amendment, offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. McKINNEY], deals with people who are not in mental health facilities but people who may be eligible to be there, a completely different subject. The discussion of whether or not somebody should be in a mental health facility is a subject and an issue that is separate and distinct from the status and the custody and the care of those who are already located in a mental health facility. It is on that distinction that I think the amendment of the gentleman from Connecticut is subject to a point of order which should be sustained.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. McKINNEY] desire to be heard on his point of order?

Mr. McKINNEY. Yes, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman may be heard.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, speaking on the point of order, I would suggest that in fact my amendment simply changes some language in the existing bill and that I very appropriately state that optimum therapeutic care is as important for the person on the sidewalk as it is for the person in the institution. In fact, in an institution right here, and the only mental institution outside of the military run by the U.S. Government, we had a man fried to death, literally, in a room of St. Elizabeth's Hospital a week ago, and I think that my amendment is clearly part of the bill and simply changes the wording in the existing bill.

The CHAIRMAN [Mr. HUGHES]. The Chair is prepared to rule.

The Chair, in reviewing the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MCKINNEY], would observe that, basically, the gentleman's effort is to broaden the definition of "neglect" and to make that somewhat more elaborate.

It still pertains to persons needing inpatient mental health facilities, in any event.

So the Chair would have to conclude that the amendment only covers a class already covered by the bill as a whole and that the amendment is germane.

The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Connecticut [Mr. MCKINNEY].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BLILEY. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation to authorize protection and advocacy programs for mentally ill individuals. The chairman of the Health Subcommittee, Mr. WAXMAN, deserves a great deal of credit for bringing this important bill to the floor.

I want to take a few seconds to clarify the concerns that some Members have with the very modest cost of this legislation. The bill authorizes $10 million for these programs in fiscal year 1986. This $10 million level is within the budget ceiling for this function. The Subcommittee on Labor/Health and Human Services/Education Appropriations, where I'm the ranking Republican, appropriated this money in the fiscal year 1986 funding bill. Those funds are being withheld pending enactment of this authorization bill, which the Senate has already passed, but the money is available.

What the legislation does is establish needed programs to protect mentally ill individuals. It authorizes State agencies to advocate on behalf of those unfortunate individuals who cannot defend themselves. Read some of the stories in the House and Senate reports on this bill about the abuse and neglect of the mentally ill. These programs are small, but important, first steps.

I also want to commend the gentleman from Florida, Mr. BILIRAKIS, for his amendment in committee with respect to families of Alzheimer's disease patients. This provision authorizes the Department of HHS to set up and coordinate a nationwide network of family support groups for the families of these patients. The groups would provide emotional, educational, and practical support as patients and their families try to deal with the devastating effects of this terrible disease.

Whether it's providing funds for research through the National Institutes of Health or other legislation, I've long been out in front on the issue of care for Alzheimer's disease patients. It's a disease with no known cause or cure, but with our hope and our help, the day for a cure will come.

For the past two Congresses, I've introduced legislation to provide a 30-percent tax credit for expenses that families incur to care for Alzheimer's victims. This important bill moved forward a little bit this year when the Ways and Means Committee considered adding it to the tax reform bill. It wasn't added because of the revenue loss—and even though I disagreed with the revenue estimates, we're working to streamline this bill and get it added in the other body.

These are the type of things we need to do—support for the mentally ill and their families. Support this modest legislation.

Mr. BLILEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to H.R. 4055. I will say at the outset that my opposition is somewhat reluctant because the programs authorized and set up by this legislation are certainly well intentioned. There is some evidence of a need for some form of oversight for mental health services. I will also say that this bill does not impose a new layer of Federal bureaucracy for its implementation, but relies on mental health support and advocacy groups already in existance. It is quite refreshing to note that there is a growing awareness that the old theory that all good things come from Washington and that only a host of Federal employees can be responsive to our citizens is finally dying out.

My opposition to H.R. 4055 is based on the financial plight and budgetary crisis that we all acknowledge we are facing. While this proposal only authorizes $33 million over the next 3 years and the first year funds are already available, the fact remains that this is money that we simply do not have. The first year funds that have been appropriated could be saved and could help protect some other existing program that we know is beneficial. I will follow a policy this year of opposing any new spending or authorizations except under the most extraordinary circumstances. This bill does not meet that criteria.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like to say that I fully support the McKinney amendment that will be offered later. The gentleman from Connecticut and I have long agreed that a good portion of the homeless people we hear so much about are on the street because of the "least restrictive environment" criteria that does not adequately deal with the individual abilities and needs of people. I will vote for the McKinney because it will improve H.R. 4055. I believe that we should pass H.R. 1479, but adding its definition to H.R. 4055 is better than nothing.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DANNEMEYER

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DANNEMEYER: Page 18, insert after line 7 the following:

TITLE III—MISCELLANEOUS

SEC. 301. PUBLIC BATHS.

That no city, town, or other political jurisdiction may receive Federal revenue sharing funds under chapter 67 of title 31, United States Code, if it permits the operation of any public bath which is owned or operated by an individual who knows or has reason to know that the bath is hazardous to the public health or who knows or has reason to know is used for sexual relations between males.

Mr. DANNEMEYER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California.

There was no objection .

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. GILMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3492, legislation to authorize a new 3-year program to protect and advocate for mentally ill individuals. At this time, I would like to extend thanks to the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN], and the gentleman from Florida [Mr. BILIRAKIS], for having explored at length the need for a more thorough network of services for the mentally disabled.

I am sure that we are all very aware of the budgetary constraints imposed by the Federal deficit. I am not advocating exorbitant spending, but urging that we pay closer attention to our Nation's widespread health problems which will only worsen if we do not act upon our good judgment in this matter. Who is able to ignore, for instance, current statistics which reveal that a staggering 31 to 41 million Americans suffer from clearly diagnosable mental disorders?

The members are, indeed, large, but what strikes me as even more disconcerting is the unfortunate shortage of programs to monitor the effectiveness of our mental health services. At a time when scientific knowledge is providing the means to treat and cure so many diseases, we still are confronted with insufficient protection of the mentally ill patient's rights. The argument in support of improving protection and advocacy programs is no more compelling than in the case of the mentally ill. Recent congressional hearings point to serious instances of abuse and neglect of institutionalized, and recently deinstitutionalized, mentally ill patients.

Enactment of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act in 1975 included the establishment of certain protection and advocacy services which have won the approval of both committee members and participants. H.R. 3942 builds upon this already successful program by extending the authority of the P&A agencies to properly monitor, evaluate, and comment on the development and implementation of Federal, State, and local laws, policies, and programs affecting the mentally disabled. In addition, H.R. 3492 addresses the problems of mentally ill persons who have been discharged from a hospital, nursing home, or community facility, recognizing that a mental disability is not necessarily cured the minute that the individual is released from a health care facility.

In addition to the benefits which are awarded to the mentally disabled, H.R. 3492 contains language to establish family support groups to provide, without charge, educational, emotional and practical support to victims of Alzheimer's disease and their families. I feel that the committee has done a superb job in addressing the inadequacies of Alzheimer's-related services which are not sufficiently covered under most private health insurance programs as well as under Medicare and Medicaid. Indeed, families must, to a large extent, research the disease on their own; a task which would discourage even the most persistent and motivated individual. This measure would serve to eliminate this troublesome situation by providing access to necessary information and emotional assistance to families confronting the disease.

I can speak with confidence that the mental health establishment in my congressional district will benefit enormously from enactment of H.R. 3492. Indeed, State program and advocacy agencies across the country will be able to enlarge the scope of their work, thus ensuring that those who are stricken by a mental disease or by Alzheimer's will receive excellent medical care which is now afforded to the victims of most other physical disorders. In an age of rapid medical advancement, it only seems logical that the mentally ill are also beneficiaries of this technological progress.

It is with these thoughts, then, that I appeal to my colleagues today, hopeful that you will offer your strong support for this measure and confident that the lives of so many Americans can be improved and indeed, sustained, by enacting H.R. 3492, the protection and advocacy for mentally ill individuals.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman and Members, in the opinion of the American people, a public health menace of severe proportions is now facing the country, namely, the AIDS crisis. In a recent poll, the AIDS epidemic in America ranks very close to being the No. 1 public health problem in the Nation. This amendment seeks to address one of the policy options that we can take in Congress to deal with diminishing the transmission of this fatal disease, namely, by saying to any city in America that chooses to continue to receive its revenue-sharing funds that it is going to have to shut down its bathhouses.

These AIDS factories exist essentially in three cities of the country: Los Angeles, San Francisco, and New York. Those three cities combined produce about two-thirds of the AIDS cases, some 16,000, so far, in the Nation, half of whom have died.

In my State of California we have close to 100 bathhouses now operating. We created this bathhouse culture in this country in 1975 in the State of California through the medium of repealing the law proscribing sodomy, and bathhouses proliferated after that time when our culture said to the people of the State of California, condoning sodomy and such activities, that that is where the bathhouse culture came.

Medical experts tell us that AIDS, a fatal disease for which no cure has yet been developed, is transmitted sexually by anal intercourse, and we know that that is what is going on at bathhouses. There was a time in this country when you went to a bathhouse to get a bath. But that is a very limited activity that goes on at bathhouses today, and we all know it.

This just says, very simply, in order to reduce the incidence of this fatal disease, we will shut down the bathhouses in the country. This Member from California has introduced five bills. One of them relates to this subject matter. It has been assigned to a committee. In writing, I have asked the chairman of this committee, the Committee on Government Operations, to give a hearing on the bill, but we are still waiting for when the hearing will take place. Indeed, this Member from California is still waiting for a response when a hearing will take place.

So I have no other alternative except to watch for a health care vehicle being processed through the House of Representatives so that I will have an opportunity of offering an amendment to such a bill, to give my colleagues an opportunity of voting on a matter on which I know they yearn to vote, because every Member in this House, of course, is interested in reducing the incidence of a fatal disease and improving the health of the American people. I cannot think of a better way to do both of those objectives than to adopt this amendment.

POINT OF ORDER

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] press his point of order?

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I do assert my point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state his point of order.

Mr. WAXMAN. The amendment is a prohibition for the expenditures of revenues under the Revenue Sharing Act. It is not germane to the legislation before us.

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from California [Mr. DANNEMEYER] wish to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Yes, I do, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. Chairman, since the bill before us now relates to a new program relating to the expenditure of funds to reduce the suffering and improve the care of the mentally ill, does it not seem logical that we would add an amendment that would reduce the incidence of a disease that is fatal?

The CHAIRMAN [Mr. HUGHES]. The Chair is prepared to rule on the point of order.

General revenue sharing is a matter that is within the jurisdiction of the Committee on Government Operations. The bill in question deals with mental health, not all public health.

For the reasons advanced by the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN], the point of order is well taken and is sustained.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation which would provide for the protection and advocacy of mentally ill persons. During recent hearings before Congress, the very serious problems of abuse and neglect of those individuals who have been institutionalized for mental illness and those individuals who have been recently released from institutions were brought to light. The inadequacies in the present internal and volunteer patient representative programs were outlined in detail by witnesses. These inadequacies make it imperative that we, in this body, support legislation calling for the protection and improved advocacy services for the mentally ill.

We, in Congress, last addressed this issue through enactment of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance Bill of Rights Act over 10 years ago. This act established State programs and advocacy agencies that have won near unanimous support from all over the country.

H.R. 3492 also would authorize family support groups and a national network for victims of Alzheimer's disease and related memory disorders, which affect the lives of nearly 2.5 million middle-aged and elderly Americans. Victims of Alzheimer's, who ultimately suffer the deterioration and loss of memory attention, span and judgment, ultimately must rely entirely on others in order to function in their daily lives.

Currently, little coverage for Alzheimer's related services is provided by private health insurance, Medicare or Medicaid. We can act today to help bridge this gap that blocks Alzheimer's victims from enjoying a more normal life.

Under the provisions of H.R. 3492, which has been outlined earlier on the floor, funds would be provided to program advocacy agencies to administer a new program intended to protect and advocate for mentally ill individuals, who in most cases cannot protect or fend for themselves.

Perhaps even more tragic than a lack of support for our mentally ill and victims of Alzheimers is the abuse and benign neglect often associated with the care of these individuals.

I wish we in good conscience could state that abuse and neglect did not occur. But the preponderance of frightful evidence to the contrary demands our immediate attention.

By authorizing programs to monitor, evaluate, and comment on the development and implementation of these programs, we can have a positive impact on the treatment received by our mentally ill and our victims of Alzheimer's disease.

The development and implementation of the aforementioned programs will require new outlays authorized by this body. And in the present austerity mood of Congress, we must in fact closely examine where any new expenditures originate.

Yet to permit further abuse of our mentally ill, to permit overt neglect of Alzheimer's disease, and to permit this tragic lack of support for those individuals to continue would be as cruel as the pain and suffering we allow by not taking action to help them.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge the Members of this body to think about the positive impact this bill would have on the lives of our mentally ill and Alzheimer's victims. By voting in favor of H.R. 3492, we take an important first step forward toward the protection and advocacy of these individuals.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WALKER

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order on the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALKER: On page 18, after line 7, add the following new title:

"TITLE III

"Nothing in this Act shall be construed as superceding any of the balanced budget provisions set forth in section 201(a)(7) of Public Law 99-177."

□ 1345

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, what this particular amendment says is that we have to make this bill comply with what we have set forth in Gramm-Rudman. In Gramm-Rudman what we said was that we were going to have a declining series of deficit numbers over a period of years until we get to a balanced budget in 1991.

Under the provisions of this amendment, we would simply assure that this particular bill complies with that goal that we have set for ourselves. It seems to me that it is important as we establish a new program here that we understand that new spending has to fit into that which we have already committed ourselves to. We committed ourselves to something by fairly wide numbers; now it comes time for specifics. In this case, what we are doing is matching the specifics with what we have committed ourselves to in policy.

This particular amendment says that those balanced budget provisions that we are now engaged in trying to attain will be also the focus of this particular piece of legislation. That none of the spending that is done under this bill will be done in violation of the commitments that we have made toward getting to a balanced budget in 1991.

It seems to me that it is an entirely technical amendment because what it seeks to do is assure that that which we have already put in law is complied to within this particular bill. I would hope that we can get an approval of the amendment.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WAXMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. Chairman, I cannot understand why this amendment is necessary; I do not see how anyone could interpret this legislation as superseding the legislation known as Gramm-Rudman-Hollings. I cannot see any reason to object to the amendment or any reason to support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, if I understand what the gentleman is saying to me, it is that he does not object to the amendment. I assure the gentleman that under interpretations that I have had given to me, that there may be some need under these programs, to assure in instance after instance that what we do is comply the specifics of authorization to the commitment we have made in policy. That is all this amendment seeks to do. It seems to me that it is entirely in line with what the House decided to do in December.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALKER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the amendment being offered by my colleague relates to what bill?

Mr. WALKER. This particular act that is before us; H.R. 3492, and the public law to which I refer in 99-177 is the Debt Limit Extension Act that we passed last year that included Gramm-Rudman.

Section 201(a)7, under that particular bill, is that section of the bill that commits us to declining deficit numbers over a period of years.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. If the gentleman will yield, the bill being considered by the House right now is H.R. 4055, and I would suggest that my colleague from Pennsylvania make a unanimous-consent request to amend his amendment to make it applicable to H.R. 4055.

Mr. WALKER. I apologize to the gentleman.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that my amendment be made applicable to H.R. 4055.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Pennsylvania?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Chairman, I had the earlier bill number as reported from the gentleman's committee, of course.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. It is possible that there was no objection because the amendment was to another bill. I thank my colleague.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman, and I appreciate him pointing out this gentleman's mistake.

The bill is as is stated. It is an attempt to make this particular bill comply with our balanced budget.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this legislation. I wanted to, at some point, ask a question of the chairman of the subcommittee to clarify certain provisions or concerns that I may have.

I would just point out to the body, some people may question whether I have a conflict of interest in dealing with a piece of legislation like this, since my wife is a psychiatrist and I used to be an attorney for the State Mental Health Department of the State of Oklahoma.

I would submit that this particular legislation is of great interest and of great value, not only across the board in the country, but to individual States. My experience in this area is working with the State mental health departments of a particular State indicates that there is a need within those mental hospitals and those institutions to provide the institutional framework for the advocacy of those patients' rights.

Some States have gone and taken steps forward to provide that. For instance, the State of Oklahoma actually had funds for an attorney in those State hospitals to do just that. I understand the conflict is and the concern that the committee has is that the State provides the funding and actually signs the checks for that person. Now, I think that the establishment of an independent source or an agency or body, entity, whatever you want to call it, would go a long way to provide greater independence for those.

The question I would like to ask the chairman is whether or not the institutionalization of this or the implementation of this provision would mandate or require early release. Are we establishing a system that is going to require the early release of patients? For instance, if they do not meet the clear standard of danger to themselves or others. Is that a policy objective of this legislation?

I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN] for his response.

Mr. WAXMAN. I thank the gentleman.

I think the more appropriate way to look at the policy perspective of this legislation is to recognize this protection and advocacy agency as acting on behalf of the patient, most likely within an institution, to be sure that patient is not abused or neglected. I think for the most part we are talking about patients that will remain in an institution, but we want to be sure that the appropriate care is given to that patient.

Mr. McCURDY. I thank the gentleman for that clarification and I think that is important for the record.

Mr. Chairman, I would just conclude by saying it is important that we recognize that during the early 1960's and early 1970's that the trend in mental health was to seek the release of all institutionalized patients or those that did not present a clear and present danger to others or even to themselves. But what we see today in this country is that many of the homeless that are sleeping on the grates here in Washington, DC, and other States are those very people that were released from the mental health institutions. It is us, until the States have developed some kind of infrastructure, to provide for those and care for those. We have a crisis in the mental health system.

I appreciate the chairman's comments, and I rise in support of the legislation.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McCURDY. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. I thank the gentleman.

If the gentleman will turn to page 8 of the bill, since he is an attorney who has worked with mental health programs and your wife is a psychiatrist, provision 2 on page 8 calls for a board which shall include attorneys, mental health professionals, individuals of the public who are knowledgeable about mental illness, a provider of mental health services, and then individuals who have received or who are receiving mental health services or family members of such individuals.

The second part of that says that at least half of the membership shall be comprised of individuals who are receiving or have received mental health services or family members of such individuals. In your opinion, does this restriction that over half the board has to be those who have had mental illness or members of their families, will that restrict the board in your opinion, or do you think this last phrase is necessary?

Mr. McCURDY. Let me yield to the chairman. I would be interested to hear what his response is because this is the first time I have seen that particular provision, and I would be glad to comment afterward.

I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. McCURDY] has expired.

(On request of Mr. WAXMAN and by unanimous consent, Mr. McCURDY was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

□ 1355

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCURDY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Chairman, this is an advisory committee.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Let me state again that that is page 8, lines 9 through 14.

Mr. WAXMAN. It is an advisory committee wholly to advise the protection and advocacy agency on how to represent the mentally ill. They are acting in an advisory role.

Mr. McCURDY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman.

I would submit to my colleague, the gentleman from Utah, that if it is strictly an advisory committee, I do not see it merely as policy that it would not be an onerous burden. As a matter of fact, it probably would be helpful, as much respect as I have for attorneys, and it probably would not hurt to have someone who has been in the system at some point in time to have a better understanding as to actually what happens on a day-to-day basis in those institutions.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. McCURDY. I yield to the gentleman from Utah.

Mr. NIELSON of Utah. I do not object to the language that says that individuals who have received or are receiving mental health services and family members of such individuals should be on the board.

What I do wonder is, why should the board be at least half of that type? The board would have to be very large if you are going to have attorneys, mental health professionals, individuals from the public who are knowledgeable about mental illness, and providers of mental health services. In addition to over half of that, you will have a very large and cumbersome board, and I wonder if you felt that that last phrase, from line 9 to line 14, was really needed in order to get that representation.

Mr. McCURDY. Well, I think that this legislation, as well as much of the legislation that comes on this floor, is probably imperfect, but I do not think that particular provision destroys or in any way undermines the general intent and purpose of the legislation.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to the bill?

There being no further amendments, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore [Mr. AUCOIN] having assumed the chair, Mr. HUGHES, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4055) to assist the States to establish and operate protection and advocacy systems for mentally ill individuals and to promote family support groups for Alzheimer's disease patients and their families pursuant to House Resolution 360, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

71-059 O-87-34 (Pt. 1)

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 290, nays 84, not voting 60, as follows:

Mr. GINGRICH changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. LIGHTFOOT changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the bill was passed.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UDALL). Pursuant to the provisions of House Resolution 360, the Committee on Energy and Commerce is discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 974) to provide for protection and advocacy for mentally ill persons.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WAXMAN

Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WAXMAN moves to strike out all after the enacting clause of the Senate bill, S. 974, and to insert in lieu thereof the text of H.R. 4055, as follows:

TITLE I—MENTAL HEALTH ADVOCACY

SECTION 101. SHORT TITLE.

This title may be cited as the "Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Individuals Act of 1985".

SEC. 102. DEFINITIONS.

For purposes of this title—

(1) The term "abuse" means any act or failure to act by an employee of a hospital, nursing home, board and care home, or community facility for mentally ill individuals which was performed, or was not performed, in a knowing, reckless, or intentional manner, and which caused, or may have caused, injury to a mentally ill individual, and includes—

(A) the rape or sexual assault of a mentally ill individual;

(B) the striking of a mentally ill individual;

(C) the use of excessive force when placing a mentally ill individual in bodily restraints; and

(D) the use of bodily or chemical restraints on a mentally ill individual which is not in compliance with Federal and State laws and regulations.

(2) The term "eligible system" means the system established in a State under part C of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act to protect and advocate the rights of individuals with developmental disabilities.

(3) The term "mentally ill individual" means an individual—

(A) for whom a diagnosis of mental illness has been made by a mental health professional qualified under the laws of a State;

(B) who is an inpatient in a hospital or nursing home or a resident in a board and care home or a community facility for mentally ill individuals; and

(C) for whom a legal guardian, conservator, or other legal representative has not been appointed, unless the legal guardian, conservator, or other legal representative requests the eligible system for the jurisdiction in which such individual is located to treat the individual as a mentally ill individual.

(4) The term "neglect" means a negligent act or omission by any person responsible for providing services in a hospital, nursing home, board and care home, or community facility for mentally ill individuals which caused or may have caused injury to a mentally ill individual or which placed a mentally ill individual at risk of injury, and includes the failure—

"(A)(i) in the case of individuals who need to be placed in inpatient mental facilities, to place such individuals in optimum therapeutic settings and to provide mental health treatment and related support services appropriate to such individuals' level of functioning,

"(ii) in the case of residents of public inpatient mental health facilities who have been inappropriately placed in such facilities, to discharge such residents, and, to the extent appropriate, to place them in optimum therapeutic settings and to provide mental health treatment and related support services appropriate to such individuals' level of functioning,

"(iii) in the case of individuals who are discharged from, or are in need of placement in, inpatient mental health facilities, to inform them of available community-based facilities and programs providing mental health treatment and related support services and to provide them access to a sufficient number of adequately staffed and adequately funded community-based facilities and programs providing mental health and related support services, and

"(iv) to otherwise establish or carry out an appropriate individual program plan or treatment or discharge plan for a mentally ill individual,

(B) to provide adequate nutrition, clothing, or health care for a mentally ill individual, or

(C) to provide a safe environment for a mentally ill individual.

For purposes of clauses (i) and (ii) of subparagraph (A), the term "optimum therapeutic setting" means the environment that is least restrictive of an individual's personal liberty and where the care, treatment, habilitation, or rehabilitation is particularly suited to the level of services necessary to properly implement an individual's treatment, habilitation, and rehabilitation. The optimum therapeutic setting for an individual may be a licensed and properly operated State hospital or other public residential care facility.

(5) The term "Secretary" means the Secretary of Health and Human Services.

(6) The term "State" means each of the several States, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, Guam, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, American Samoa, the Virgin Islands, and the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands.

(7) The term "board and care home" means a facility licensed or regulated by a State under section 1616(e) of the Social Security Act.

SEC. 103. PROTECTION AND ADVOCACY SYSTEM.

(a) ALLOTMENTS.—

(1) The Secretary shall make allotments to eligible systems to establish and administer a system—

(A) which meets the requirements of subsection (b), and

(B) which is designed to protect and advocate the rights of mentally ill individuals and investigate incidents of abuse and neglect of mentally ill individuals.

(2) An eligible system which receives funds under an allotment under paragraph (1) may use such funds to enter into contracts with entities for activities under the allotment but may not use such funds to contract with entities which—

(A) provide treatment or services (other than advocacy services) to mentally ill individuals, or

(B) are not public or nonprofit private entities.

(3) If an eligible system which receives an allotment under paragraph (1) is an agency of a State, other agencies of such State may not use more than a total of 5 percent of any such allotment for any fiscal year for administrative expenses related to the system established under the allotment.

(b) SYSTEM REQUIREMENTS.—

(1) A system established in a State under an allotment under subsection (a)(1) to protect and advocate the rights of mentally ill individuals shall—

(A) have the authority to—

(i) investigate incidents of abuse and neglect of mentally ill individuals;

(ii) pursue administrative, legal, and other appropriate remedies to ensure the protection of mentally ill individuals who are inpatients in hospitals, or nursing homes in the State or are residents of board and care homes or community facilities in the State for mentally ill individuals; and

(iii) pursue administrative, legal, and other appropriate remedies on behalf of individuals who were mentally ill individuals and who are residents of the State;

(B) be independent of any agency in the State which provides treatment or services (other than advocacy services) to mentally ill individuals;

(C) have access to hospitals, nursing homes, and board and care homes and community facilities for mentally ill individuals in the State;

(D) have access to all records of—

(i) any individual who is a client of the system if such individual or the guardian of such individual has authorized the system to have access; and

(ii) any person—

(I) who by reason of the mental or physical condition of such individual is unable to authorize the system to have such access;

(II) who does not have a legal guardian or for whom the legal guardian is the State; and

(III) with respect to whom a complaint has been received by the system or with respect to whom there is reason to believe that such individual has been subject to abuse and neglect;

(E) establish a board—

(i) which will advise the system on policies and priorities to be carried out in protecting and advocating the rights of mentally ill individuals, and

(ii) which shall include attorneys, mental health professionals, individuals from the public who are knowledgeable about mental illness, a provider of mental health services, individuals who have received or are receiving mental health services, and family members of such individuals and at least one-half the membership of which shall be comprised of individuals who have received or are receiving mental health services or are family members of such individuals;

(F) have an arrangement with the agency of the State which administers the State plan under title XIX of the Social Security Act for the furnishing of the information required by subsection (c); and

(G) on January 1, 1987, and January 1 of each succeeding year, prepare and transmit to the Secretary and the head of the State mental health agency of the State in which the system is located a report describing the activities, accomplishments, and expenditures of the system during the most recently completed fiscal year.

(2) In the case of individuals who were mentally ill individuals, a system may pursue remedies under paragraph (1)(A)(iii) on behalf of such individuals only with respect to matters which occur within 90 days of the date of the discharge of such individual from a hospital, nursing home, board and care home, or community facility for mentally ill individuals.

(3) A system which has access to records which, under Federal or State law, are required to be maintained in a confidential manner by a provider of mental health services, shall, except as provided in paragraph (4), maintain the confidentiality of such records to the same extent as is required of the provider of such services.

(4)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), a system which has access to records under paragraph (1)(D) may not disclose information from such records to the individual who is the subject of the information if the mental health professional responsible for supervising the provision of mental health services to such individual has provided the system with a written determination that disclosure of such information to such individual would be detrimental to such person's health.

(B) An individual to whom disclosure of information has been denied under subparagraph (A) may select, or the system, acting on behalf of such person, may select, another mental health professional to review such information and to determine if disclosure of such information would be detrimental to such person's health. If such mental health professional determines, based on professional judgment, that disclosure of such information would not be detrimental to the health of such person, the system may disclose it to such person.

(c) INFORMATION FOR SYSTEMS.—The Secretary and the agency of a State which administers its State plan under title XIX of the Social Security Act shall provide the system in the State established under an allotment under subsection (a) with a copy of each annual survey report and plan of corrections for cited deficiencies made pursuant to titles XVIII and XIX of the Social Security Act with respect to any hospital, nursing home, board and care home or community facility for mentally ill individuals in the state in which such system is located. A report or plan shall be made available within 30 days after the completion of the report or plan.

SEC. 104. ADMINISTRATION OF ALLOTMENTS.

(a) FORMULA.—

(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2) and subject to the availability of appropriations under section 105, the Secretary shall allot the amounts available for allotment under section 105 for a fiscal year on the basis of a formula prescribed by the Secretary which is based equally—

(A) on the population of each State in which there is a eligible system, and

(B) on the population of each such State weighted by its relative per capita income.

For purposes of subparagraph (B), the term "relative per capita income" means the quotient of the per capita income of the United States and the per capita income of the State, except that if the State is Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or the Virgin Islands, the quotient shall be considered to be one.

(2) Notwithstanding the formula for allotments prescribed by paragraph (1) and subject to the availability of appropriations under section 105—

(A) the amount of the allotment of an eligible system in each of the several States, the District of Columbia, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico shall not be less than $125,000; and

(B) the amount of the allotment of an eligible system in Guam, American Samoa, the Commonwealth of the Northern Mariana Islands, the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands, or the Virgin Islands shall not be less than $67,000.

(b) REALLOTMENT.—

(1) To the extent that all the funds appropriated under section 105 for a year and available for allotment in such fiscal year are not allotted to eligible systems because—

(A) one or more eligible systems have not submitted an application for an allotment for such fiscal year, or

(B) one or more eligible systems have notified the Secretary that they do not intend to use the full amount of their allotment.

the amount which is not so allotted shall be reallotted among the remaining eligible systems.

(2) The amount of an allotment to an eligible system for a fiscal year which the Secretary determines will not be required by the system during the period for which it is available shall be available for reallotment by the Secretary to other eligible systems with respect to which such a determination has not been made.

(3) The Secretary shall make reallotments under paragraphs (1) and (2) on such date or dates as the Secretary may fix (but not earlier than 30 days after the Secretary has published notice of the intention of the Secretary to make such reallotment in the Federal Register). A reallotment to an eligible system shall be made in proportion to the original allotment of such system for such fiscal year, but with such proportionate amount for such system being reduced to the extent it exceeds the sum the Secretary estimates such system needs and will be able to use during such period. The total of such reductions shall be similarly reallotted among eligible systems whose proportionate amounts were not so reduced. Any amount so reallotted to an eligible system for a fiscal year shall be deemed to be a part of its allotment under subsection (a) for such fiscal year.

(c) APPLICATION.—No allotment may be made to an eligible system unless an application therefor is submitted to the Secretary. Each such application shall contain—

(1) assurances that amounts paid to such system from an allotment under section 103 will be used to supplement and not to supplant the level of non-Federal funds available to the system to protect and advocate the rights of mentally ill individuals;

(2) assurances that the eligible system for which the application is submitted will have a staff which is trained or being trained to provide advocacy services to mentally ill individuals; and

(3) such other information as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

(d) PAYMENTS.—For each fiscal year, the Secretary shall make payments to each eligible system from its allotment under section 103. Any amount paid to an eligible system for a fiscal year and remaining unobligated at the end of such year shall remain available to such system for the purposes for which it was made for the next fiscal year.

(e) REPORT.—The Secretary shall include in each report required under section 107(c) of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act a separate statement—

(1) describing the activities, accomplishments, and expenditures of systems to protect and advocate the rights of mentally ill individuals supported with payments from allotments under section 103, including—

(A) a specification of the total number of mentally ill individuals served by such systems;

(B) a description of the types of activities undertaken by such systems;

(C) a description of the types of residential facilities for mentally ill individuals with respect to which such activities are undertaken;

(D) a description of the manner in which such activites are intitiated; and

(E) a description of the accomplishments resulting from such activities;

(2) describing—

(A) systems to protect and advocate the established rights of mentally ill individuals supported with payments from allotments under this section;

(B) activities conducted by States to protect and advocate such rights;

(C) mechanisms established by residential facilities for mentally ill individuals to protect and advocate such rights; and

(D) the coordination among such systems, activites, and mechanisms: and

(3) making recommendations for activities and services to improve the protection and advocacy of the rights of mentally ill individuals and a description of needs for such activities and services which have not been met by systems established under allotments under section 103.

In preparing the statement required by this subsection, the Secretary shall use and include information submitted to the Secretary in the reports required under section 103(b)(1)(G).

(f) OTHER ASSISTANCE.—The Secretary shall provide training, technical assistance, and evaluation services to eligible systems with respect to activities carried out under an allotment under section 103. In any fiscal year, the Secretary shall obligate for assistance under this subsection an amount equal to 5 percent of the amount appropriated for such fiscal year under section 105.

(g) ADMINISTERING AGENCY.—The Secretary shall carry out this title through the Administrator of the Alcohol, Drug Abuse, and Mental Health Administration.

SEC. 105. AUTHORIZATIONS.

For allotments under section 103 and assistance under section 104(f), there are authorized to be appropriated $10,500,000 for fiscal year 1986, $11,000,000 for fiscal year 1987, and $11,525,000 for fiscal year 1988.

SEC. 106. OTHER ALLOTMENTS.

(a) SECTION 1916.—Section 1916(c) of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 300x-4) is amended by adding at the end the following:

"(16) There is in the State a protection and advocacy system for mentally ill individuals which meets the requirements of section 103(b) of the Protection and Advocacy for Mentally Ill Individuals Act of 1985.".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect October 1, 1986.

TITLE II—FAMILY SUPPORT GROUPS

Sec. 201. ALZHEIMER'S DISEASE.

(a) FAMILY SUPPORT GROUPS.—The Secretary of Health and Human Services (hereinafter in this section referred to as the "Secretary"), acting through the National Institute of Mental Health, the National Institutes on Health, the National Institute on Aging, and the Administration on Aging, shall promote the establishment of family support groups to provide, without charge, educational, emotional, and practical support to assist individuals with Alzheimer's disease or a related memory disorder and members of the families of such individuals. Such groups shall be established in university medical centers and in other appropriate health care facilities which receive Federal funds from the Secretary and which conduct research on Alzheimer's disease or provide services to individuals with such disease and in community based programs which receive funds from the Administration on Aging.

(b) NATIONAL NETWORK.—The Secretary shall provide for the establishment of a national network to coordinate the family support groups described in subsection (a).

(c) REPORT.—The Secretary shall report to Congress, not later than one year after the date of the enactment of this section, on family support groups and the network of such groups established pursuant to this section.

TITLE III

Nothing in this Act shall be construed as superseding any of the balanced budget provisions set forth in section 201(a)(7) of Public Law 99-177.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title of the Senate bill was amended so as to read: "An Act to assist the States to establish and operate protection and advocacy systems for mentally ill individuals and to promote family support groups for Alzheimer's disease patients and their families."

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill, H.R. 4055, was laid on the table.

H.R. 3492 was laid on the table.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. WEAVER. Mr. Speaker, I was coming from a subcommittee meeting and missed the vote on H.R. 4055, the bill just passed. Had I been able to hear the bells, I would have attended the House session and voted "aye."

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. LOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask for this time for the purpose of receiving the schedule for the balance of today and next week. I will be happy to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Washington [Mr. FOLEY], the majority whip, for that purpose.

Mr. FOLEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, this completes the legislative action for this week.

The House will meet at noon on Monday to consider three bills under suspension of the rules:

S. 1831, the Arms Export Control Act amendments;

S. 1574, the smokeless tobacco education bill; and

H.R. 4061, Federal Employees Benefits Improvement Act of 1986.

Recorded votes on suspensions, if ordered, will be postponed until Tuesday, February 4, when the House will meet at noon. There are no suspension bills currently listed for Tuesday, but recorded votes on any suspensions taken on Monday will be taken on Tuesday.

The House will also consider H.R. 3010, Health Planning Amendments of 1985, an open rule, 1 hour of debate.

The House will then recess until 7:30 p.m., when it will reconvene to receive the President of the United States at 8 p.m. for his State of the Union Address. I would like to underline that the original schedule of 9 o'clock for the President's State of the Union Address has, by his request, and the concurrence of both sides of the aisle, of course, and the other body, been rescheduled for 8 p.m. on Tuesday evening. Consequently, the House will reconvene at 7:30 rather than 8:30 as originally scheduled.

Mr. LOTT. At this point, I suppose that would take a resolution?

Mr. FOLEY. I will offer a unanimous consent request to amend the present resolution at the conclusion of our colloquy.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. FOLEY. On Wednesday and the balance of the week, February 5, 6, and 7, the House will meet at 3 p.m. on Wednesday and 11 a.m. for the balance of the week. On Wednesday and the balance of the week the House will consider H.R. 3456, consumer product safety amendments, subject to a rule being granted; and H.R. 2418, Health Services Amendments of 1985, an open rule, 1 hour of debate.

It is not anticipated, if we complete this schedule, that there will be a session on Friday, February 7. But the announcement is made subject to the usual reservation that conference reports may be brought up at any time, and a further program may be announced later.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the gentleman for that information.

Just one request. It had been indicated that perhaps House Joint Resolution 3, the comprehensive test ban resolution, might be scheduled sometime soon. Does the gentleman have any information on that?

Mr. FOLEY. I think it is anticipated that there will be a scheduling of H.R. 3. It has not yet been set for action by the House, but I think that it should be anticipated that the bill will be rescheduled for consideration in the near future.

Mr. LOTT. Which would probably mean that it could not come up now before the week of February 18, is that correct?

Mr. FOLEY. That is correct.

Mr. LOTT. At the earliest.

Mr. FOLEY. It will not be scheduled for next week.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the distinguished whip.

CHANGE OF TIME FOR JOINT SESSION OF CONGRESS—STATE OF THE UNION ADDRESS

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, notwithstanding the provisions of House Concurrent Resolution 274, the two Houses of Congress shall assemble in the Hall of the House of Representatives at 8 p.m. instead of 9 p.m. on Tuesday, February 4, 1986, to receive a message from the President on the State of the Union.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. UDALL). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, FEBRUARY 3, 1986

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 12 noon on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule shall be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

CLOSING LOOPHOLES FOR DUTY-FREE ETHANOL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MICHEL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing legislation which is designed to close all the loopholes which allow ethanol imports to enter the United States duty-free.

Several years ago, Congress enacted legislation which recognized the need to assist our developing domestic ethanol industry by establishing a 60-cent-per-gallon duty on ethanol imports.

Since then, however, foreign nations, particularly Brazil, have been searching out and utilizing a variety of different methods by which to avoid payment of the 60-cent duty.

One such method was to mix ethanol with another compound and have it avoid the duty by being declared an ethanol mixture. We were able to get the Customs Service to close that door last fall, but this bill goes a step further by writing that regulation into law. That will prevent the Customs Service from reversing itself at any future date.

The Brazilians are now mixing ethanol with another compound called benzenoid. Because benzenoid is on the Generalized System of Preferences list, it is allowed into this country duty-free.

The result is that ethanol, under the guise of a benzenoid mixture, is being allowed into this country without payment of the duty. My bill closes that loophole and imposes the duty on such a mixture.

Under current law, a product from a Caribbean nation is allowed into this country duty-free if as little as 35 percent is added to the value of a product. Brazil is shipping ethanol through Jamaica, where 35 percent is ostensibly being added to its value, and it is then coming into this country duty-free.

Similarly, our insular possessions, such as the Virgin Islands, are allowed under the law to ship foreign products into this country duty-free if as little as 30 percent is added to the value of the product. We understand that the Virgin Islands are gearing up to ship foreign ethanol into the United States under this guise.

This bill closes both of these loopholes and allows ethanol to be imported duty-free only if it is 100 percent produced in our possessions or the Caribbean nations.

Ethanol is an important industry in central Illinois, not only for the jobs it provides in the ethanol manufacturing plants, but also for the market it provides for corn farmers. The more corn that is sold for ethanol production, the more we help the overall farm economy and lower the cost to the Government.

This bill represents a comprehensive effort to protect our domestic ethanol industry and our farmers from unfair foreign competition, and I hope it will be considered at the earliest opportunity.

THE SHUTTLE TRAGEDY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. WEISS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. WEISS. Mr. Speaker, I rise with profound sorrow in the wake of the first in-flight tragedy of the space program, involving the space shuttle Challenger and its crew of Francis R. Scobee, Michael J. Smith, Judith A. Resnik, Ronald E. McNair, Ellison S. Onizuka, Gregory Jarvis, and S. Christa McAuliffe.

The deaths of these seven exceptional individuals is especially poignant because we were all represented among them: Mothers and fathers, teachers and engineers, blacks, whites, Asians, Christians, and Jews. As Americans, we all feel that we have lost a part of ourselves.

Children across the country, prepared for a lesson in space exploration, were instead thrust into an exploration of self, a lesson in mortality. We must reach out to these children, and to each other. We grieve together in this national tragedy.

To the families and friends of these seven courageous and dedicated Americans, I offer my deepest condolences. We will not forget your loved ones, as we will not forget you.

A 1-YEAR MORATORIUM ON SPENDING INCREASES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. BROWN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. BROWN of Colorado. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a resolution which will call for a 1-year moratorium on spending increases. I would like to share with the Members and with people from my district the philosophy that is behind this budget resolution.

The reality is, since 1980, that we have talked and talked and talked about cutting spending, but spending this year will be 68 percent higher than it was in 1980. The reality is there has not been a single year in which we have cut spending. We have consistently increased spending.

How often have we heard that the reason for the massive deficits are the cuts in taxes? The reality there is also startling: Tax revenue this year will be 50 percent higher than it was in 1980. That is right; not a cut, but an enormous increase in taxes over the last 5 years.

The truth is, Mr. Speaker, that this Nation's leadership has not stood up to the horrible dilemma we face with the deficit, and the reality is that we continue to consume the savings of working men and women of this country within the Federal deficit.

What we have done is take the seed corn that can be reinvested to make America competitive in the world market, and consume it in Federal spending. Sadly, much of that Federal spending is wasted.

We now face a dilemma under Gramm-Rudman. We face some enforcement procedures that are going to push us to face up to that problem. How do we face up to it?

I think one way we can face up to it is by simply not increasing Federal spending for 1 year. If we will simply go 1 year without increases across the board, we can meet the Gramm-Rudman targets. So often we hear today of the Draconian cuts that Gramm-Rudman is going to cost, but the truth is, it does not need Draconian cuts. The truth is, we can do it by a simple, modest restraint of not increasing spending and be more than within the target.

So the resolution we have introduced today simply says we are not going to increase spending. It does allow for an increase in the numbers of people who will now participate in the entitlement programs, and it makes up for that very modest increase in spending by reducing foreign aid. It reduces foreign aid in outlays back to $14 billion, that is roughly the level it was 2 years ago.

The truth is, foreign aid has gone up perhaps as fast as almost any part of the budget. Foreign aid today is almost double what it was in 1980, so the modest reduction that takes place in foreign aid is enough to take care of the adjustments that we will have in the entitlement programs.

Again, we are not increasing or giving a COLA to anyone; that is not easy, but I believe the American people will respond. I think the American people will feel that everyone is doing their part, and they will stand up to do theirs.

Where we have run into problems in the past is, we, as a Congress, have been unwilling to share the burden evenly. We have asked people to accept huge cuts while others get huge increases. The reality is, no one wants to do that; but if we will be evenhanded, I think we will find the American people behind us.

This resolution offers a budget alternative that is realistic, that meets the Gramm-Rudman targets, and it can bring about true and long-lasting prosperity for our country.

AN AMERICAN TRAGEDY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York [Mr. LAFALCE] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LAFALCE. Mr. Speaker, the explosion of the space shuttle Challenger was both a human and a national tragedy. The wound will heal, but we will always bear its scar in the remembrance of our grief at the death of Challenger's crew.

The loss of the crew's seven members was felt personally by all Americans, probably because television made their lives and deaths seem so close and personal. We sympathized with their relatives, sharing their horror as they watched Challenger disappear in a fireball, leaving nothing but white contrails streaming silently down the depthless blue sky, a signal of the death of their loved ones.

We Americans feel a special attachment to our astronauts. They are some of the best among us, excelling in their character, strength, intelligence, and courage, quietly dedicated to our country's historic task of space exploration. But the Challenger crew seemed especially close to us because it included Christa McAuliffe, the first teacher in space, a civilian, like all of us. She was to share the excitement and wonder of space travel not only with children, but with all of us other private citizens for whom space travel remains, as it once was for her, only a distant dream. In a sense, she was our representative. Her loss, with the six other astronauts, was especially poignant and shocking.

Challenger's explosion also was a national tragedy in another sense. It struck, perhaps harder than any other blow since the assassination of Martin Luther King, at the aspirational soul of America. This soul lives in the American people, guiding our unique history. It is the soul that strives for human progress, to perfect the world's most vital democracy, to create in a cruel and chaotic world a civilization of justice, liberty, enlightenment, and happiness. Its spirit of purposeful adventure established our Nation in a new world, then pushed back the frontier of civilization to the Great Lakes, to the Pacific, and on past the Moon to the far reaches of the solar system.

The ideals of the American soul are universal; its great victories have been won not against other peoples, but over injustice, ignorance, and poverty. For this the world respects America, and shares a measure of pride in our achievements. We planted the American flag on the Moon, but we also left a marker there with our solemn declaration to the cosmos: "We came in peace for all mankind."

Human progress is not won without costs, though. Its triumphant achievements are paid for by tragic losses. The tragedy should always be minimized, and may sometimes be deferred, but it cannot be avoided. Challenger's destruction reminds us that although our triumphs far outweigh our tragedies, our Nation's commitment to human progress is a sometimes burdensome glory.

Challenger's seven astronauts gave their lives in pursuit of the highest purposes of their country and their humanity. To surrender those purposes would be to trivialize their sacrifice. Instead, their brave example should anneal our will to join in the enterprise they can no longer continue. We will modify the space shuttle, we will resume its missions, and we will continue to pursue knowledge of the universe just as we continue to pursue our civilization's other great ideals.

Dick Scobee, Michael Smith, Judith Resnik, Ronald McNair, Ellison Onizuka, Gregory Jarvis, and Christa McAuliffe: All represented what is deepest and greatest about America. When I think of them, I shall remember the words of Stephen Spender:

Near the snow, near the sun, in the highest fields,
See how those names are feted by the waving grass,
And by the streamers of white cloud,
And whispers of wind in the listening sky;
The names of those who in their lives fought for life,
Who wore at their hearts the fire's center.
Born of the sun they traveled a short while towards the sun,
And left the vivid air signed with their honor.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. KLECZKA] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. KLECZKA. Mr. Speaker, due to conflicting official business, I was unable to be present for certain votes taken by the House on Thursday, January 23.

Had I been present for consideration of H.R. 357, the rule on H.R. 2443, the Expedited Funds Availability Act, I would have voted "aye."

On rollcall No. 5, the Wylie amendment to H.R. 2443, I would have voted "nay."

On rollcall No. 6, the Shumway amendment to the Bartlett amendment, I would have voted "nay."

On rollcall No. 7, the Shumway substitute to H.R. 2443, I would have voted "nay."

On rollcall No. 8, the vote on final passage of H.R. 2443, I would have voted "aye."

COMPETING WITH RUSSIA: THE NUCLEAR CHALLENGE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. STUDDS] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. STUDDS. Mr. Speaker, because the Soviet Government has the capacity to blow us up, our relationship with Russia is different—and more important—than our dealings with any other country.

Because of the brutal and repressive nature of the Soviet political system, our country could never surrender to Russian policies and still be true to ourselves.

Our Nation must compete with the U.S.S.R. if our rights and interests, and those of our friends, are to be preserved. For this reason, choosing wisely when, where, and how best to engage in this competition is fundamental to the success or failure of American foreign policy.

But these choices are not always easy to make, for the process of competing implies the existence of a goal, and the specific objectives of the United States-Soviet competition have not always been clear.

Military conquest, after all, is unobtainable; nuclear weapons have ruled that out.

Political victories in the international arena tend to be short-lived, limited by the modern attention span, and by the proven ability of both superpowers to absorb and overcome diplomatic setbacks of major consequence.

Economic competition is restricted by the inability of either country to affect the base of natural resources and manpower upon which the material prosperity of the other depends.

Some in both countries still believe that we are engaged in an historically predestined ideological clash which will soon result in a clear and complete triumph of one over the other. It is very human to think in those terms, but history lends little support to this pretentious notion.

As competitors in search of a competitive goal, we must, then, lower our sights. This is no short-term struggle, and victories achieved along the way will be both uncommon and incomplete. We are not playing football; no global poll is about to decide who is No. 1; and although the field of competition is broad, not every battle will be of equal importance. Doing better than the Russians in the Olympics is hardly as significant as having a stronger economy or possessing a more coherent and effective policy toward the developing world.

But although the importance of some aspects of the United States-Soviet competition may be obscure, the most vital American objective is not: To assume and maintain a leadership role, in cooperation with our allies, for the purpose of pursuing and obtaining a more stable, less threatening balance of nuclear arms. Unfortunately, it is in precisely this area that we are competing least well.

This is true, in part, because of our own policies, and in part because the Soviet Union may be better led today than at any time in the past 20 years. Party Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev seems ready and willing to play a role on the world stage in Russia's behalf that has not, in recent memory, been capably performed. He is the first Soviet leader to demonstrate a grasp of modern public relations and the uses of the international media. His presence in the Kremlin should cause the United States to throw off any feeling of complacency that may have developed during the past decade of aging and ailing Soviet leaders, for Gorbachev is likely to be around for a long, long time.

From the day he took office, Secretary Gorbachev has sold Russia to the international press as the initiator of proposals to reduced the level and danger of nuclear arms. Although many of these initiatives have been sloppily presented and transparent in their goals, the record of recent Soviet public statements and commitments in the field of arms control cannot be lightly dismissed.

Unfortunately, the Reagan administration has thus far failed to effectively test the intentions of the Soviet leadership. If Gorbachev is sincere, we have not capitalized on that sincerity; if Gorbachev is bluffing, we have not called that bluff. We are not, in short, competing very well.

Consider yourself, for example, an observer in Europe concerned about nuclear weapons, and with a consequent interest in arms control.

What do you see? Gorbachev calling for a moratorium on all nuclear testing; Reagan vowing to continue tests of new weapons. Gorbachev calling for a halt to the testing of antisatellite weapons; Reagan insisting on more such tests. Gorbachev reiterating support for deterrence; Reagan seeking to make the United States invulnerable to Soviet attack. Gorbachev calling for a 50-percent reduction in offensive nuclear arms in return for limits on star wars; Reagan refusing to compromise. Gorbachev supporting a nuclear freeze; Reagan denouncing it. Gorbachev pledging never to be the first to use nuclear weapons; Reagan refusing to make the same pledge. Gorbachev urging continued support for the Antiballistic Missile Treaty; Reagan developing a "new legal interpretation" that would render the treaty without meaning. Finally, and most dramatically, Gorbachev outlining a plan to eliminate all nuclear weapons from the Earth over the next 15 years; Reagan caught by surprise, able only, weeks later, to provide a feeble and unhelpful response.

President Reagan recognizes the political and diplomatic complications that will arise if the Soviets are able to portray themselves as being more committed to arms limitations and world peace than is the United States. Such a perception could divide NATO, and weaken the allied response to the Soviets on a wide range of issues, including military and diplomatic matters, and human rights.

I do not believe that any citizen of this planet should ever doubt the commitment of the United States to peace, but the fact is that Gorbachev has been making public relations mincemeat out of President Reagan on the subject of nuclear arms.

The administration response to the Soviet strategy has been slow, weak, misguided, and characterized by a lack of unity within the executive branch. But the underlying problem has been the President's insistence that the credibility of the United States—on this most vital of competitive issues—should rest almost solely on the illusion that star wars is the key to future world peace.

The irony is that the President's strategy could ultimately produce benefits for the United States, but only if and when it is abandoned. The star wars program can be useful only as a "bargaining chip"; only if the United States is willing to accept limits on nuclear defensive systems in return for Soviet reductions in offensive arms. But if the President means what he has been saying, and fails to compromise on star wars, arms control will never progress, and, for this failure, the United States will be blamed.

The reason is simple. The premise of star wars is that the world will be safer if both superpowers are completely shielded from nuclear attack. Thus, both sides are encouraged to develop systems that will shoot down the missiles of the other. This will, in the President's words, "render nuclear weapons obsolete." To embrace this concept, one must abandon the notion that peace is best maintained by a strategy of mutually assured destruction—the guarantee that any nation launching a nuclear attack will itself be destroyed.

No doctrine can guarantee that nuclear weapons will never be used. But the fact is that we have lived with them for 40 years. During this period, the conviction that these weapons could not be used successfully to achieve a military or political objective has gained strength in the United States, in the Soviet Union, and around the world. Each superpower holds hostage the entire population of the other. It is not pleasant, but we have survived, and anyone who disrupts this fragile standoff had better have something both superior and substantial to put in its place.

But star wars, in the sense envisioned by the President, is a fantasy. No one with serious scientific or military credentials, and I emphasize no one, believes the United States can be shielded completely from hostile nuclear attack. Even the most ardent supporters of the star wars program concede it could not protect against attack from bombers or low-flying cruise missiles. Moreover, the cost of building our star wars program will exceed by far the cost to the Russians of building new offensive weapons that could overwhelm or outwit that system.

Beyond the technical problems are the limitations of diplomacy. Even the theoretical viability of star wars depends—utterly and completely—on the successful negotiation of an arms control agreement that would require levels of mutual understanding, trust, verification, and technical difficulty unprecedented in the history of United States-Soviet relations.

This is so because it will be many times more difficult to reach an agreement regulating the development and deployment of defensive weapons than it would be simply to limit the number of offensive weapons each side may possess. And if there is no agreement to regulate defensive systems, neither side will feel secure enough to limit the missiles and bombers it may ultimately need to overwhelm whatever defense the other may have.

Secretary of Defense Weinberger admitted this when he wrote recently that "even a probable (Soviet) defense would require us to increase the number of our offensive forces and their ability to penetrate Soviet defenses." The Russians will use the same logic to enhance their offensive capabilities if the United States begins building a defensive system.

This means that a doctrine of reliance on national defensive systems is not now, and may never be, a realistic alternative to our traditional dependence on offsetting offensive power. But it is the policy of the U.S. Government at this point to deny this plain truth, to denounce the deterrence doctrine as immoral, and to sacrifice progress in limiting offensive arms to preserve full freedom to pursue the star wars dream. This is folly; it will fuel the arms race; and it will both embarrass the United States and undermine our security.

The administration position is so weak that some star wars supporters other than the President have begun to argue that defensive systems will strengthen, rather than weaken, the traditional notion of mutual assured destruction. They support building antimissile systems that would shield offensive missiles rather than people. But this approach also has many problems, and it is, in any event, directly counter to the administration's overriding goal of relying on defensive systems for protection against nuclear war. This is the theme which dominates the President's rhetoric and which now dictates the American approach to arms control.

It is administration policy not to sacrifice star wars even to achieve what ought to be our primary goal in negotiations with the Soviet Union—reducing the number of offensive missiles targeted on the United States and Europe. What's more, the insistence that we test star wars technology means the United States will not agree to a ban on the testing of antisatellite weapons, even though Soviet antisatellite weapons could ultimately threaten America's ability to detect a nuclear attack. This same reasoning has caused President Reagan to refuse Soviet offers for a moratorium on testing weapons through underground explosions.

We are not competing successfully or intelligently with the Soviet Union in the area of nuclear arms. The President has proposed a dramatic change in the basis upon which the nuclear peace has four decades been maintained, but he has provided no clear blueprint through which this new basis can be achieved. His commitment to star wars is so strong he seems willing to ignore a chance to limit the number and restrict the type of offensive weapons available to each side. In so doing, he is making it easy for the Soviet Union to portray itself as more committed to arms control than is the United States, and he is reducting the likelihood of an agreement that would be in the best interests of our country.

This policy must change. I suggest three steps:

First, the President should cease attacking the doctrine of deterrence, and instead reaffirm America's belief that neither superpower can realistically expect either to defend against or "win" a nuclear war.

Second, barring a complete weapons freeze, American military and arms control strategy should be designed to strengthen deterrence through:

Mutual reductions in existing offensive weapons; and Limiting new weapons development to systems suited for responding to, rather than initiating, a nuclear attack—the single warhead Midgetman missile, for example, instead of the MX.

Third, the United States should challenge the Soviets to agree to even more rapid reductions in offensive weapons than has thus far been proposed, to a prohibition—or, at least, far stricter limits—on future nuclear tests, and to a complete ban on testing during this century of antisatellite and other space weapons. Above all, our Government should stop talking about the obstacles to meaningful arms control, and start detailing, instead, exactly how we believe such agreements can be achieved.

This strategy will only work if President Reagan is willing to cash in the star wars bargaining chip now. By agreeing to ban star wars testing through the year 2000, we would place enormous pressure on Russia to live up to Gorbachev's rhetoric, and to reduce offensive arms of the type and in the quantity needed to protect America's security. And because such an agreement need not affect pure research on star wars, it would preserve the possibility that we might, at some future time, find a constructive role for limited nuclear defense.

This approach could yield substantial political and military benefits for the United States:

First, it would strengthen the doctrine of deterrence, upon which we must inevitably rely for protection against nuclear war.

Second, it would underline America's commitment to nuclear stability and peace, thereby thwarting Russian efforts to divide our country from our friends abroad; and Third, it would dramatically decrease the cost of building and maintaining nuclear weapons, thereby making scarce Federal funds available for other important defense and nondefense needs.

The time has come for the President to cast off his negative and unproductive attitude toward the control of nuclear arms. In a competition that affects all of Earth's inhabitants, our country should have a strategy—not a fantasy—with which to calm the fears and rally the hopes of humankind.

EFFORTS TO ACHIEVE A BALANCED BUDGET

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I want to talk today about our constituents controlling spending and balancing the budget, and I want to do so because, like virtually every Member of this House, I have had a number of questions from both constituents at home and from the members of the news media about the effort to achieve a balanced budget, about the process by which we are trying to control spending, about what will happen over the next few months.

I think that it is important, first of all, to put all of that in context. For example, a local editor, Bill Knight of Griffin, asked me last week: How would the March 1 sequestering affect Griffin, Spalding County, the Sixth District of Georgia?

My first instinct was to focus immediately on specific line-by-line cuts, to get involved in, "What will happen to this program and that program?" I stopped myself, because I realized that to talk about controlling spending in isolation is like discussing chemotherapy with a patient before discussing cancer. To talk specifically only about how the negative side of this process will work, is to be as one-sided and as lopsided as a surgeon who approaches you and says, "How would you like to lose your right leg?" No one in your right mind wants to lose their right leg.

By definition, it is human to want everything to go on the way it is now because we are used to it being the way it is now. So the question then becomes: "Oh, then why would you go through all these changes?" The answer is, first of all I think to look at the large picture.

The fact is that the United States cannot possibly sustain $200 billion a year deficits for year after year after year. The fact is that the large, liberal welfare state that we inherited, that came to us through the last 30 years of adding more bureaucracy, more offices in Washington, more transfer payments, cannot possibly be sustained.

The fact is, as Bill Moyers indicated in a 2-hour special on CBS Saturday night, that the welfare system has led to the collapse of the family in large parts of America; that in some groups, 61 percent of our children are being born outside of marriage, that that is a real problem that has to be addressed.

The fact is that if you look out into the nineties, and you look at a Japan that is economically more competitive, a West Germany that is economically more competitive, a Soviet Union that is militarily more competitive, you say to yourself: What kind of America am I going to give to my children and my grandchildren?

The No. 1 thing you know is that at the rate we are going, having doubled the deficit from a trillion dollars in 1980 to $2 trillion in 1986, we cannot possibly continue to go down the same road.

So the first point to make about this process of getting to a balanced budget is, what would America be like in 1991? I said to Bill Knight of Griffin: Griffin will have lower interest rates, young people in Griffin will have a better chance to buy a house; the dollar will be a more appropriate value and will be more competitive for the textile industry, which is in Griffin; we will have a better chance to invest our resources in new jobs and new factories; we will have a better chance to have a stable dollar to fight inflation so we will not see a tremendous debt leading to tremendous inflation, wiping out our savings, wiping out our hope for the future.

I said: We will have made the basic change back to an underlying American value. You know, it used to be that we paid off the mortgage and we left our children the farm.

□ 1440

However, in recent years we have been borrowing more and more and more money, we have been running a deficit every year since 1969. In effect, we are selling off the farm and planning to leave our children the mortgage. By moving to a balanced budget by 1991 we will fundamentally get back, I think, to basic, traditional American values, to a belief in a world in which you get what you pay for and in which you expect to do your fair share to make the world better for your children and for your grandchildren.

In that setting I think there are three basic problems with the way in which some news media personnel and some politicians have been approaching the whole issue of getting to a balanced budget. The first is the argument about whether or not the Gramm-Rudman bill in its current form is unconstitutional.

Let me suggest that historically one of the defenses of the old order in every period of reform is to rush to the old order Supreme Court to get new ideas thrown out.

Anyone who has studied Franklin Roosevelt and the New Deal knows that in bill after bill, in idea after idea, in the 1930's, they were thrown out by the Supreme Court. The Agricultural Adjustment Administration was thrown out, the National Recovery Act was thrown out. What was the answer? The answer was not to give up the New Deal. The answer was not to quit the experiment. The answer was not to say, "Well, the Supreme Court saved us from ourselves, let's not worry about it." The answer was to write the laws more carefully, to find a more creative solution, to figure out what the Supreme Court meant, and to keep working at it. So the first step, I would say to every American who wants a balanced budget, to every American who wants to fight inflation, to every American who cares about lower interest rates, the first answer has to be: Whatever the Supreme Court may decide about this particular version of our effort to balance the budget and control spending, if necessary, we will pass a better-crafted, a better-written, a more effective bill, but we are going to keep moving to a balanced budget.

Second, there is a serious effort, it would seem, on the part of some politicians, particularly those who believe in the liberal welfare state and in the last 20 years of doing business, people believe that higher taxes, bigger bureaucracy, more welfare programs, there is an effort almost gloatingly to focus on this stupid side of the Gramm-Rudman approach. Let me say, I have said it over and over again, the Gramm-Rudman approach in its worst case, which is sequestering, proves that we are willing to balance the budget in the worst way possible. But that sequestering process is there only as a last resort. We do not have to sequester if in fact Congress is willing to do its job. Now sequestering is a big word. What it basically means is that a group of technocrats, bureaucrats, would systematically go through the budget, apply a mathematical formula, and cut spending; it is foolish because it is the equivalent of a family that finds itself suddenly without enough income, cutting 12 percent out of its beer budget and 12 percent out of its medicine budget.

Now clearly you have to be pretty dumb to cut 12 percent off the medicine that keeps you alive and 12 percent off of alcohol or 12 percent off of vacations or 12 percent off of fancy clothing. The fact is of course a family faced with a tighter budget sits down and sets priorities and says, "Well, we have to buy clothes for the kids to go to school, we have to buy gasoline to get to work, we have to buy medicine so that grandmother will be all right, we are not going to cut out any essentials. What is it we can give up?"

I think we in the Congress must recognize that those who would wait and rely on sequestering, those who would wait and rely on a purely mathematical system to stupidly and arbitrarily cut spending are almost hoping that the sheer fear of the Frankenstein monster, this meat grinder chewing up everything will get us to somehow waive or vacate or get away from moving to a balanced budget.

The burden, I would suggest, is on all of us to rise above partisanship, to rise above the mere opportunity of scoring a few points and, instead, to say it is the responsibility of the House and the other body to work together to produce a budget which meets the targets that this Congress adopted in December. It is the job of Congress to set choices, to decide on priorities; that in fact we should precisely choose between one more bureaucracy and making sure that everyone gets enough health care, between one more program that is not essential and making sure that handicapped Americans have adequate educational opportunity. It is precisely the job of Congress to decide how to set priorities, and the challenge to us should be to say to our constituents, "What are the priorities that matter?" and to recognize that while some people will be very angry because you are cutting off their particular access to Government money, that 95 or 98 percent of all Americans are very, very supportive of a program which moves us toward a balanced budget, which fights inflation, which will bring about lower interest rates, and which lays the base for a prosperous 1990's.

Let me go back and reinforce this because I think the Gramm-Rudman balanced budget process seen in isolation does not make sense. It only makes sense in the larger picture. I recently had a number of retired Federal employees who came to me who were very upset because they were not getting their cost-of-living increase. They were saying, "Why are we being picked on? Why just us?" And only when I talked to them about the larger picture: "Do you really want us to keep borrowing money from your grandchildren?" Do they really want a $3 trillion or $4 trillion debt? Are they really willing to look at the 1990's when, if America suddenly cannot pay its bills, the Japanese and the Europeans decide to withdraw their money from our bond market. If we suddenly face a true liquidity crisis, what in the 19th century would have been called a financial panic, is that really the 1990's in which they want to live?

Instead, I said, imagine a 1990's in which we actually keep the faith. America in the 1990's in which we control spending. Imagine the 1990's in which in 1991 we have a balanced budget and in 1992 and 1993 and 1994 or 1995 we run a little bit of a surplus and begin to pay down the debt. Imagine getting back to what were the historic interest rates in the United States, 3 percent and 4 percent prime rates. Imagine a setting in which your grandchildren have a good job, the factory has invested in new machinery to compete with Japan or Germany, and we are in a position where they can actually afford to go out and buy a house.

I said to them, "Now if you are willing to tell me you are going to run the risk, you are going to take the burden of saying, 'Give me my extra 3 percent, I do not care what happens to my grandchildren,' fine, then we will have one message. But if you are willing for me to control spending, trying to balance the budget, to get to the kind of future where your children and your grandchildren have a better life, then tell me, do you want to raise taxes on your children who are working? Or will you let me control spending?"

The answer I got almost universally was if I would control spending across the board, if everybody was involved, then they wanted to be part of getting America to a balanced budget; that as long as we were controlling inflation and keeping prices down, as long as what we were requesting was reasonable, we were not going back to the Jimmy Carter liberal welfare state kind of inflation, where you had 13-percent inflation per year, 22-percent interest rates, and the world seemed to be falling apart, as long as we would do what we could to keep prices down to a reasonable level, they were willing for an anti-inflation, probalanced budget effort to do their fair share.

But there is a third zone, because again I think there is a tendency to say, "What are you going to cut? Show me your list of pain. Show me how you are going to raise taxes." I think there is a third area we need to explore. Not only do we need to find a constitutional way to continue the process of getting to a balanced budget; not only do we need to be responsible here in the Congress and set priorities and be willing to stand up and be counted about what we want to pay for; but, third, we have got to look at new ideas. We have to be willing to take more positive, more dynamic approaches. Let me give you an example. The Heritage Foundation just produced a brand new report entitled "Slashing The Deficit—Fiscal 1987."

It is well worth looking at because it is, as they call it, a $122 billion savings strategy to avoid the Gramm-Rudman ax.

Notice here, Heritage, the most conservative major foundation in this city, is not saying, "Wow, won't it be exciting if we can get to a time when the Gramm-Rudman sequestering process goes into effect and we dry up spending?" They are saying just the opposite; they are saying, "Look, there is no reason to ever have that October 1 sequestering go into effect. If the Congress will do its job we will then be in a position to avoid any kind of automatic mathematical cuts in Government programs." The specific suggestions they focus on are, first of all, privatizing Federal spending. They make an argument, and it is one I want to go into at some length today, that if we would look at getting the private sector to do certain things it will be both more efficient, more effective, and in some cases pay for itself, that in fact there are things we want to do, that we want the Federal Government to provide for getting them done but then have the private sector do them.

Second, they suggest that we target program benefits more efficiently.

Third, they propose consolidating overlapping Federal programs.

Fourth, they require that in some cases those who benefit from the programs should pay a greater share of the cost of the program.

Fifth, they want to eliminate business subsidies.

Sixth, they want to move some program responsibilities back to the State and local governments.

This is a comprehensive six-point, $122 billion program.

Now I am not going to stand here and say everything that Heritage is suggesting in this book which is, after all, some 112 pages long, is the right thing. What I am going to say is that when somebody walks in and shows you $122 billion in savings, let us make sure we look at every one of them before we talk about tax increases. When they show you $122 billion of possible changes and you do not need to get more than about a third of that to make sure that you stay on the right track this year, we ought to be able to find a number in here that we can agree on, a number of things we are able to do.

They suggest some very specific examples that are pretty dramatic and pretty new. I want to talk about one that relates to my particular committee, the Committee on Public Works and Transportation, because I think it is in the right direction.

The U.S. Government currently runs two major airports, Washington National Airport and Washington Dulles International Airport. The point which the Heritage Foundation makes is why does the U.S. Government spend $35 million a year running two airports that are commerical airports that are run by commercial airlines, and how much have we invested in those airports, and what could we get for those airports?

Economist Robert Poole estimated that the Federal Government could earn an estimated $2.3 billion from the sale of National and Dulles Airports, that they are in fact commodities we have invested in.

The taxpayers all across America have built these two airports. They are used by private aviation and by airlines on a regular commerical basis. They are worth something to somebody. What we ought to do is recognize they are ongoing operations and go ahead and sell them, and at a minimum you save $35 million, and at a minimum you get a 1-year gain of $2.3 billion. That is not exactly chickenfeed even by the standards of the Federal Government.

Amtrak is probably the most commonly focused-on example of a subsidy that does not make sense. It has been estimated, for example, that Amtrak in 1983 the average passenger got 24 cents in subsidy from the taxpayers for every mile they rode. By contrast, if you happen to be in an airport or a bus, you are getting one-tenth of 1 cent per mile in subsidies from the Federal Government. That is, there were 240 times as big a subsidy if you rode a train.

I happen to have a train which comes to Atlanta. I am willing to say quite candidly that train is so expensive that it would probably be cheaper for the Federal Government to give every person who walked up to buy an Amtrak ticket a free airline ticket or a free bus ticket to get to Washington for free rather than paying for the train.

Obviously you would not want to do that very long because you would have people, being pretty smart, they would learn to show up for their free airline ticket.

But the point is, you and I as taxpayers, at a time when we do not have the money, are in effect subsidizing long-distance train travel by such a large margin that it would be cheaper in most cases to give people an airline ticket not to go take the train than it is to run the train.

□ 1455

Now, that is long-distance travel. There is an area where we badly need Amtrak. I am a very strong believer in train service between Washington and Boston, I believe strongly in train service to get people from the suburbs into the big city, certainly in a place like New York City or Chicago the trains serve a very important function. However, I do not think it is very fair to say to the taxpayers of Carrollton, GA, or Jonesboro, GA, "You are going to pay to make sure that it is easier for somebody from Long Island to get into New York City, you are going to subsidize an area that in fact could pay for itself because the people who are primarily riding Amtrak are in fact precisely the upper and middle-class taxpayers who are able to pay for the ticket."

This is not, after all, a program for homeless. This is not a program for the very poor. Very few people on food stamps get up at 6 o'clock in the morning in Long Island to ride into New York City to work in Manhattan. What we have here is an example of the classic subsidies for the upper middle class and the middle class, and it is a cross subsidy, that is, we tax the very people to hire the bureaucrats to give back the money to subsidize the ride of the people who pay the taxes. It does not make sense.

Let me suggest that in urban mass transit, an area where I do have a direct interest because of MARTA, and because the Metropolitan Atlanta Rail Transportation is important, that the fact is that while Atlanta is doing a very good job, Atlanta is paying 50 percent of the cost of building MARTA through a local tax; that in all too many parts of America as much as 85 percent of the cost of the new system is being paid for by the Federal Government; that there is a reason that the Golden Fleece Award for waste in government was given to the Urban Mass Transit Administration; that if you look at things like the people mover in Detroit, it boggles the mind how we could have thrown money away without getting the job done; that when you realize that by privatizing, that is, by allowing a private company to run the local mass transit, Norfolk, VA, for example, went to a privately contracted route and saved the per passenger subsidy by 64 percent. That is, by using a private contractor, they cut by 64 percent the subsidy per passenger.

The Southern California Rapid Transit District figures it will save $5 million annually by turning over its express bus service to private contractors. Phoenix adopted a similar strategy for Sunday service and reduced taxpayers' cost by over 50 percent.

To quote the Heritage study, "In none of these cases was service curtailed. It merely was turned over to more efficient providers."

The point I am making is that we need to look carefully at every aspect of the Federal Government, we need to ask ourselves why we are doing certain things, and we need to decide not as something that would be fun if you had the extra money—after all, if you have a little bit of money and the choice is to go to Disney World or to go in for a major operation, you would pick the major operation. If you have a modest amount of money and the choice is to go to the movies or to buy dinner, you probably would buy dinner. Now, if you have all the money in the world and you want to buy dinner and you want to go to the movies and you want to go to Disney World and you want to take care of your health care needs, you can afford it. The central underlying message of trying to get to a balanced budget is that we cannot afford the scale of government we currently have, so we have to make choices.

Let me give another example of the kind of choices we should look at. In the Bureau of the Census, the Heritage Foundation is suggesting saving $25 million. How do they suggest that? One, they encourage the greater use of automated data processing and, two, they eliminate the collection of demographic statistics which are collected solely for the benefit of private business.

Let me give you their rationale, and I am quoting from the Heritage report:

> Grace Commission cost studies of the 1980 Census revealed that the Census Bureau has squandered over a billion dollars in taxpayer money. Eighty-eight million questionnaires were processed manually by 37,000 clerks, for instance, at a cost of $50 million, 45 percent over budget. Using automatic data processing capabilities would have saved millions of dollars, the Commission concluded. The 1980 Census also collects an array of data which cost the government millions of dollars to collect and publish but which is of interest almost exclusively to private business. Businesses should at least be required to help defray the government's cost of collecting and processing such statistics. Better yet, the business community should perform many of these surveys themselves.

Now, my point would be twofold: First of all, if we can do it more efficiently, let us cut through the redtape, buy the computerized equipment and get the job done. The reality is that right now, under certain very redtape oriented procurement laws, it literally takes longer to decide what computer you want, fill out the forms to ask people to bid, process the bids, make the decision, get the money and buy the computer and get it installed. That long cycle takes longer than the lifetime of the computer, the lifetime in the sense that we are currently buying obsolete equipment because new equipment is invented between the time we define we want to buy and the time we buy it. Literally, the life cycle of brand new computer equipment is shorter than the procurement process of the Federal Government.

Furthermore, the civil service laws encourage a rigid, highly structured system which does not change.

I come from a district which has airlines which are changing. Eastern Airlines is going through changes, Republic Airlines, which is now becoming part of Northwest. Republic used to be Southern. I have tremendous changes going on. Delta, Air Atlanta, a lot of different things happening. My airline employees understand that they have got to change to be flexible to meet the new deregulated environment.

My district has textile workers. Those textile workers have to change to meet the challenge of foreign imports.

I have automobile workers. They have been through 7 years of changes to meet the challenge of foreign imports.

I have the largest record plant in the world, CBS Records of Carrollton, GA, and that record plant, because of change in technology, faces an enormous challenge from counterfeiters because the cost of counterfeiting has dropped dramatically and you can now make a cassette tape much cheaper than you used to. Again and again and again, as I go back home and as I talk to people, they tell me about the changes they are going through.

Then we went into a Federal Civil Service law so rigid, so bureaucratic, so mindlessly strict in its construction that it is impossible for the Federal Government to have the kind of fluid, task force oriented ad hoc kinds of structures that are necessary in the information age to modernize and improve and use computers intelligently.

So the first step with the Census Bureau would be to simply modernize the way in which we handle information. That would save a great deal of money.

The second step, though, is to ask about specific government functions that are done for a market. Let us say that there are a thousand businesses in America that want some kind of data from the Census Bureau, data that those businesses come and see their Congressman and they say to their Congressman, "I am in favor of that kind of information, and I think the Federal Government should get it."

My answer, frankly, is that "I am willing to have the Federal Government get that information if you are willing to pay for it. If you collectively, the thousand businesses that want that information, think it is best done by the Federal Government, I am willing to consider that. But do not ask me to tax everybody else to give you specialized information. We will set up a user fee and we will have that particular part of the Census Bureau paid for by the people who want to use it."

And there are times and places when I think that the Government does do things better than other agencies would do them or does things, frankly, that other agencies could not do at all, that could not be done purely in the private sector.

However, having charged the user fee to have the Government do it, I would then also look and ask the question: Is this a project we can get done better by contracting out and by having a private enterprise, highly efficient, profit-oriented system do it, because they have an incentive to do it efficiently, to do it quickly, to do it on time and to do it as rapidly as possible.

The point I want to make to my colleagues and to my constituents is that we are going to have to look at a lot of new approaches. We in the Congress need to approach this whole process of getting to a balanced budget, of fighting inflation, of creating the framework for a prosperous and secure 1990's by starting with this assertion: One, it really does matter, we really do want to control spending, we really want to year by year meet the targets, we want to be able to say to our children and to our grandchildren that we did the job necessary to put America in shape so that you can have a good competitive job, you can buy a house at a low interest rate, you can have a reasonable future.

Two, we really want to set priorities. We want to recognize that over the last 30 years in the liberal welfare state we have added more and more and more programs. And let me say, flatly, as a conservative Republican, I want to set priorities in the Defense Department just as much as I want to set priorities everywhere else in Government. I want us to look with the same fine-toothed comb at every military base, at every office, at every piece of redtape, at every part of the bureaucracy in the Pentagon, just as we look everywhere else. Just because waste wears a uniform does not make it less wasteful. Just because an unnecessary project happens to be under the Defense Department does not mean you are a hawk if you are willing to waste money and squander resources, as long as it is called defense.

We need a lean, efficient defense just as strongly as we need any other part of the Federal budget to be lean and efficient.

But, second, having made the determination that we are going to in fact follow this path to a balanced budget, we need to make sure that in every part of the government we make sure we set our priorities and we do first what is necessary and we ask whether the things that are desirable have to be done if we do not have the money.

Third, whenever possible we need to look at new ideas, at privatization, at contracting out, at new technology, at new approaches. We need to do everything we can to make sure that we are moving into the 21st century, not retrenching back into the 19th.

Only after we have set priorities, cut out the waste and brought in the new ideas should we even start to talk about new revenues. And when we talk about new revenues, I want to talk about them in terms of user fees and new approaches to using Federal resources, not in terms of raising taxes.

Congressman WALKER, of Pennsylvania, of the Science and Technology Committee, has been working, for example, on a specific proposal. It turns out that as we move toward fiber optics as a way of carrying information—fiber optics is a system where you use light to carry information instead of using electricity, it apparently produces a much higher amount of information flow in the same sized cable, and it is apparently being explored by AT&T, Sprint, and MCI and IBM and a variety of other information companies as the primary way of handling information flow in the 21st century. Well, it turns out that the best place, the easiest place to lay those fiber optic cables may be the median strip of Federal highways. We already have an interstate highway system across the country that has a section right down the middle that we could put the fiber optics in.

Now, some people are suggesting that the Federal Government ought to give the right-of-way for those fiber optics. I do not think so. I think we ought to go to those giant corporations and we ought to say to them, "What will it be worth to you in rent every year to be able to rent this Federal right-of-way, to be able to put your fiber optic system in, so you make money but you pay the Government money?"

Now, if in 1990, for example, we could be earning—and I am just pulling a number out of the air—$2 billion a year renting the middle of Federal highways to have fiber optics underground, having AT&T and MCI and Sprint and IBM and other companies pay their Government for the right to use that right-of-way, then as far as I am concerned that is $2 billion in revenue without raising taxes. I am very willing to get all the new revenue we can get without raising taxes. And I say this because it is the process of setting priorities first, cutting out waste second, getting in new ideas, third, find new techniques of revenue that use high technology and that open up new opportunities. Those are the first four steps of moving to a balanced budget while still having a viable and effective government.

Only after we have taken those four steps and thoroughly walked through the entire process, only then should we consider raising taxes.

And in closing let me say to my colleagues that I think it is very, very possible that if we forget partisanship, we forget ideology, we focus on the broader question, "What am I willing to give up?—and I am frankly willing to look at a wide range of things that normally would not be considered on the table for a conservative—what are liberals willing to give up, what are Republicans willing to do, what are Democrats willing to do, that collectively we in this House can move quickly, we can avoid ever having sequestered anything, we can adopt intelligent changes that raise the revenues that in fact bring about the kind of balanced budget that our country wants that provides for our children and our grandchildren a stable, healthy economy that fights inflation, provides the resources necessary to build the new factories, to create the new opportunities.

I think the 1990's could be a time of great prosperity, a time of a tremendous growth in American productivity, a time when we compete handily with Japan and Germany, when we are militarily strong enough to stave off the Soviets without any serious threat to our security.

Or, as I said in the beginning, the 1990's could be the time the chickens come home to roost. The 1990's could be the time when we failed to balance the budget, the debt grew to $3 trillion or $4 trillion, interest on the debt by itself took 40 or 41 cents out of every income tax dollar, the debt became the second largest item in the budget just paying the annual interest, and we found ourselves in desperate trouble.

It is vital that this year we determine as a Congress to act responsibly to make the real decisions ourselves to move toward that balanced budget without ever letting the sequestration process go into effect. We can do the job, we can pass the bills, we can work it out with the President so that before October 1 we have put into place the kind of sound, defensible, realistic programs that in fact the country deserves, that the Congress owes them.

CONSUMER RAIL EQUITY ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Louisiana [Mr. TAUZIN] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. TAUZIN. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague from West Virginia, Mr. RAHALL, my colleague from Kentucky, Mr. ROGERS, my colleague from Iowa, Mr. TAUKE, and myself, I am introducing a new, improved version of the Consumer Rail Equity Act that was first introduced in February. We are joined in our sponsorship by a host of distinguished Members who represent districts across the Nation.

We encourage all of our colleagues to join us in cosponsoring this legislation, as it addresses many problems the shippers and consumers of this Nation are now suffering.

Mr. Speaker, many of our shipper and consumer constituents have complained to us for some time that the railroads are gaining market power which is being used against their shipper customers. Moreover, they have complained that the provisions of the Staggers Rail Act of 1980—which were intended to prevent railroad monopoly power abuse—are not working—primarily because of the Interstate Commerce Commission's biased, and, in some cases, inconsistent and incomplete implementation of the act.

The Commission has done a miserable job of implementing the shipper and consumer protections established by Congress. At a hearing this fall in the Fossil Fuels Subcommittee of the House Energy and Commerce Committee, it became clear that the ICC has adopted a unique set of principles and concepts to implement the Staggers Act—concepts different from those used by any other regulatory commission. Shippers and consumers that are captive—or without competitive alternatives—complain that their rates are unreasonable. Other shippers, including grain shippers, manufacturers and the ports in my State and others, have complained that the railroads are using their market power to prevent competition, thus making them captive, and the ICC will do nothing to stop them. Finally, many communities and rural areas complain the Commission allows wholesale abandonments of railroad facilities without regard to whether the facilities are economic or the facility is essential to the local economy.

In 1980, Congress provided a mechanism in the Staggers Act which was intended to assure that captive shippers would not be forced to pay "unreasonable rates." Mechanisms were also established to prevent competition, and thereby create more captive shippers, and could not abandon railroad facilities unless the facility is in economic and the abandonment is in the public interest. Those mechanisms were entrusted to the ICC for implementation.

But currently, we in the Congress are being pressed by the Secretary of Transportation to sell Conrail to the Norfolk Southern Co.—a result that could, according to many shippers and consumers, increase the railroad monopoly power of Norfolk Southern Co. The ICC is also considering the proposed merger of the Santa Fe and Southern Pacific Railroads, a result which would leave several Southwestern States served by only one railroad. In addition, the administration has announced that it would like to abolish the ICC altogether. Exactly how and where the shipper provisions of the Staggers Rail Act would then be enforced has not been made clear.

But amid the complaints by consumers and shippers that the ICC has yet to find a rate unreasonable, that competition is being prevented and that abandonments are occurring with increasing frequency, the ICC has responded by saying its actions are necessary because the railroads are not making enough money. The railroads say their rate of return is too low. The ICC has said that the railroads are not financially healthy or "revenue adequate." In fact, the Commission says no railroad in this country—not a single one—is revenue adequate, not even Norfolk Southern which the Secretary of Transportation says has "deep pockets," is "highly profitable" and should buy Conrail for $1.2 billion—in cash. The ICC, however, has found Norfolk Southern to be financially unhealthy.

Mr. Speaker, during this period of ICC concern for their financial health, our Nation's "revenue inadequate" and financially unhealthy railroads have been on a buying spree. To quote just a few examples:

The Burlington Northern, a so-called revenue inadequate railroad, purchased the El Paso Natural Gas Co. for $1.3 billion in 1983 and in 1985 purchased the Southland Royalties Co. for $600 million.

The CSX Corp., another so-called revenue inadequate railroad that was unsuccessful in its effort to be selected for the purchase of Conrail, spent more than $1 billion 2 years ago to buy the Texas Gas Transmission Co. and its largest barge line competitor.

The Norfolk Southern, in addition to its proposed purchase of Conrail for $1.2 billion, has purchased North American Van Lines for more than $300 million, has purchased 20 percent of Piedmont Air Lines and has made a number of additional investments in the banking business.

Mr. Speaker, we have a real problem in our Nation concerning the growing concentration of market power in the hands of a few railroads. A New York Times editorial of December 23 addresses that problem and calls upon Congress to act. We have a responsibility to assure the Staggers Act is being enforced in the manner Congress intended. The Staggers Act—which was designed to enhance competition and prevent monopoly power abuses—clearly is not working and is actually creating greater problems.

Under the pressure of the pending Consumer Rail Equity Act, other legislative proposals and consumer complaints that have become legion, the Commission undertook a very public examination of its actions last year. What resulted? Virtually nothing. Still no captive shipper has achieved a rate reduction from the Commission, the Commission still continues to do virtually nothing to assure maximum competition between the railroads.

Mr. Speaker, if the problems at the Commission are to be corrected and if the Congress is to assure that the Staggers Act is implemented properly, we must act legislatively. The Consumer Rail Equity Act directs the ICC or its successor agency on a proper course of implementation, while maintaining the fundamentals of the Staggers Rail Act. Specifically, our legislation will:

Assure that the ICC makes a fair assessment of railroad financial health, by directing that the ICC apply to the railroads the same test that public service commissions apply to electric utilities;

Assure that when the ICC is determining whether a railroad shipment from a coal mine, grain elevators or other organization is "captive" to a single railroad, the ICC will consider the captivity of that originator rather than simply consider the captivity of the receiver of the shipment:

Direct the ICC to adopt a more accurate test for rate reasonableness than the present test of "stand alone costs"—which is what it would cost a shipper or group of shippers to provide their own transportation alternative;

Shift to the railroad the burden of proving that a captive shipper rate is reasonable, after the shipper first proves he is captive;

Make mandatory the ICC's present discretionary authority to prevent railroads from using their facilities to obstruct competition; and,

Make three procedural changes that will assure that abandonment proceedings are conducted fairly and in a balanced fashion by the ICC.

Mr. Speaker, our shipper and consumer constituents are extremely concerned about the increased monopoly power of our Nation's railroads. We must respond to the their concerns by assuring that the law we enacted in 1980, the Staggers Rail Act, is implemented in the balanced fashion Congress intended. We who are the sponsors of this legislation invite and welcome our colleagues to join us in this important effort.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that the following items be printed in the RECORD, with my statement: The New York Times editorial of December 23, a section-by-section analysis of the Consumer Rail Equity Act and a list of the companies and groups that are publicly supporting our legislation.

CONSUMER RAIL EQUITY ACT—SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

INTRODUCTION AND OVERVIEW

The Consumer Rail Equity Act is a mid-course adjustment in the operation and implementation of the Staggers Rail Act of 1980. The purpose of this legislation is to reaffirm the balance that was carefully struck in the Staggers Rail Act of 1980 between the needs of large and small railroads, shippers, receivers and consumers, while preserving the fundamental structure and premises of the current law. The legislation's goal is to continue and enhance the Staggers Act's emphasis on permitting competitive market forces to govern the terms and conditions of rail freight service wherever possible, while providing a measure of practical protection for those shippers who remain subject to railroad monopoly power—as Congress also intended in enacting the Staggers Act.

The bill does not change the present statutory threshold for Interstate Commerce Commission jurisdiction over maximum rail rates, and thus does not seek to extend regulatory authority to any rates that are not subject to Commission review under present law. This legislation does not extend regulation to rates that are below the Commission's present jurisdictional threshold and continues the deregulation of contract rates that was established by the Staggers Act.

The most significant changes from present Commission practice and law that are proposed in the bill include a more realistic test of railroad revenue adequacy than the test being employed by the Commission, the codification and clarification of the Commission's July 31 market dominance test, a shifting of the burden of proof with respect to rate reasonableness from the captive shipper to the railroad, and directing the Commission to adopt a rate reasonableness test that will assure that those shippers, receivers and consumers who must bear most of the burden of helping the railroads achieve revenue adequacy are treated equitably.

The bill also enhances the availability of competitive rail opportunities for shippers and receivers, and makes several procedural improvements, including improvements in abandonment proceedings and the standard for ICC review of State commission rulings on intrastate rail rates. Finally, the bill assures that the national rail transportation policy which is embodied in the Staggers Act is consistent with other national goals of assuring competitive transportation rates for domestic commodities.

Section 1—Short Title

This section provides that the bill may be cited as "The Consumer Rail Equity Act."

Section 2—Purpose

This section reaffirms the goals of the Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act of 1976 (the 4R Act) and the Staggers Rail Act of 1980, and declares the intent of Congress that this bill shall assure that the previous two Acts are administered in a balanced manner that both provides adequate protection for those subject to railroad monopoly pricing power and maximizes the opportunities for intramodal competition.

Section 3—Market dominance

Under the Staggers Act, the ICC has jurisdiction to determine the reasonableness of only those rates that are charged to "captive shippers". The act defines a "captive shipper" as a shipper that (1) is paying a rate that exceeds the jurisdictional threshold established in the Act and (2) is subject to railroad "market dominance".

On July 31, 1985, the Commission adopted a new "market dominance" test under which the shipper must prove that it has no transportation alternatives, but the railroad could allege and prove that the shipper has a "product" or "geographic" alternative. These "product" alternatives might be the use of fuel oil instead of coal in the case of a utility or one type of grain instead of a second type of grain in the case of a bakery or feed lot. These "geographic" alternatives might be Pennsylvania coal instead of West Virginia coal or eastern coal instead of western coal in the case of a utility or midwestern grain instead of North Dakota gain in the case of a bakery or feed lot. Shifting the burden of proving the existence of "product" and "geographic", competition is a substantial improvement in the Commission's market dominance test. It should be emphasized that in codifying this improvement, the legislation intends that the railroad bear the burden of proving not just that product or geographic competition exists, but also that such competition effectively constrains the railroad's ability to charge high rates.

Second, the Commission for the first time, on July 31, stated that it would analyze the captivity at the origin of the shipment as well as the capitivity at the destination of the shipment. This is also a substantial improvement over prior Commission action. Previously, a country grain elevator or a coal mine could be completely captive, but be denied access to the Commission because the ICC focused only on captivity at the destination. This bill will clarify the unsettled point in the July 31 ruling concerning whether the ICC would consider "product" and "geographic" competition at the origin. Applying these concepts to an originating coal mine, grain elevator or manufacturing facility would be inappropriate. Therefore, the amendment in the nature of a substitute provides that "product" and "geographic" competition will not be considered in determining captivity at the origin.

Section 4—Rate reasonableness

A persistent complaint about the present administration and interpretation of the law has been the Interstate Commerce Commission's standard for determining the reasonableness of a rate that is being charged a captive shipper. The Commission has embraced a philosophy of maximum rate reasonableness based almost entirely on demand for rail freight service, rendering the cost to the railroad of providing the transportation nearly irrelevant as a ratemaking consideration. No other regulated industry enjoys such freedom from cost scrutiny. In almost all other instances in which a company possesses monopoly power—and Congress recognized in the Staggers Act that railroads continue to possess monopoly power with regard to captive shippers—some consideration of cost is included in the disciplining of abuses of that monopoly power.

The legislation will not impose utility-type rate of return-based regulation upon market dominant carriers. The conclusive presumption that no market dominance can be found for a rate yielding revenues between 170 and 180 percent of variable cost, which precludes the Commission from even entertaining a complaint about a rate below that level, represents a fundamental policy judgment of the Staggers Rail Act that some shippers and receivers will be required to pay a greater share of the revenues needed to develop and sustain a sound national rail transportation system.

This bill does not revisit that policy decision of the Congress. This legislation does not quarrel with the jurisdictional threshold of the Staggers Act or with the judgment that some shippers and receivers, and by extension some consumers, should pay more than others for rail transportation. Section 4 of the bill does, however, alter the method by which the Commission has been reviewing the reasonableness of rates of carriers possessing monopoly power. The Consumer Rail Equity Act requires the Commission to give careful attention to the railroads' costs and revenue needs.

On September 3, 1985, the ICC adopted the Coal Rate Guidelines which contain the rate reasonableness standards for captive coal. The Commission has indicated strongly in several pending cases that all or part of the coal rate guidelines will apply to other captive commodities, including: aluminum (Anaconda v. Burlington Northern, Docket 37550 and other cases), wheat and barley (McCartney Farms v. Burlington Northern, Docket 37809), phosphates (Mobil Chemical v. Seaboard Coast Line, Docket 37583 and other cases), soda ash (Allied Chemical v. Ann Arbor, Docket 38412S), sugar (Amstar v. Alabama Great Southern, Docket 37478), clay (International Minerals & Chemicals v. Burlington Northern, Docket 38084), pulpwood and wood chips (Consolidated Papers v. Chicago & North Western, Docket 37626), magnesium ingots (Aluminum Co. of America v. Burlington Northern, Docket 37699), and spent nuclear fuel (United States Department of Energy v. Aberdeen & Rockfish, Docket 38376 and other cases).

In the pending ICC proceeding McCarty Farms, Inc. V. Burlington Northern Inc. (Docket Nos. 37809 and 37809 (Sub-No. 1)), the ICC asked for comments on whether it should apply the coal rate guidelines to captive grain. On November 10, 1983, in its answer, Burlington Northern stated:

"There is no conceptual or legal justification for regulating market dominant coal traffic differently than other market dominant traffic under the statutory scheme of the Interstate Commerce Act. The Congress has chosen to make no distinction between maximum rate regulation on coal as compared with grain, as it has done, for example with recyclables. Thus, the defendant sees no economic or legal justification for finding these grain rates unreasonable."

The final coal rate guidelines provide three alternative "constraints" for captive coal rates. Under all three, the captive shipper has the burden of proof. (A fourth "constraint," phasing, is so ill defined at present as to be of little practical use.) First, if the railroad is revenue adequate, the coal transportation rate is constrained in some unspecified fashion. However, in light of the ICC's failure to reform its revenue adequacy test, this type of constraint has little significance. This is particularly true since the ICC has indicated that this constraint—which is not defined will apply only after the rail carrier has been revenue adequate for several years.

Second, according to the ICC, proof that a carrier's revenue inadequacy is due entirely to management inefficiency will constrain the rate. This imposes an unprecedented burden of proof on the shipper, especially in light of the magnitude of overstatement of revenue need built into the ICC's current revenue adequacy test. Thus, even if the ICC keeps its promise to allow adequate discovery to the shipper, it is still unlikely that shippers will attempt this approach to rate relief.

Third, the new guidelines retain "stand along cost" as an upper limit on rates. Stand alone cost is the cost to a shipper or group of shippers of building and operating their own railroad at today's prices. In other words, if a shipper thinks the quoted rate is unreasonably high, the ICC requires the shipper to demonstrate the cost to build and operate a substitute transportation facility at current prices. While the Commission appears to have clarified some ambiguities in its initial proposal, many important questions concerning the application and implementation of the stand alone cost constraint are left unanswered.

No matter how these questions are resolved, however, two things are clear. First, only a very few shippers will ever be able to afford to attempt the application of stand alone cost. Second, even for those few who can afford it, only those who are moving tremendous volumes of traffic over densely traveled rail corridors will have any hope of success. In short, the Commission's final coal rate guidelines do not constitute a fair and workable standard of rate reasonableness for captive coal traffic or for any other commodity.

This legislation provides that the Commission, within one year after the enactment of the Act, must adopt a rate reasonableness test that applies to all captive commodities (except recyclables that are subject to a statutory rate test). The new test must consider, among other factors, the railroad's need for revenues, the relationship of the rate to the railroad's cost of providing the service (including, where relevant, the fact that the shipper is helping to relieve the railroad's cost burden by supplying cars, paying for loading facilities or the like), and whether and to what extent the railroad's revenue needs require captive shippers to pay rates that exceed the jurisdictional threshold. The test adopted by the Commission cannot, however, be "stand alone cost" which was adopted in the September 3 Coal Rate Guidelines. This legislation also requires that the Commission affirmatively inquire into and make affirmative findings respecting the Long-Cannon factors. Thus, the Commission can no longer avoid implementing the factors, either by suggesting that the complainant has to show that the railroad would be revenue adequate but for its inefficiencies before a rate reduction will be ordered, or by ignoring the third factor altogether.

Section 5—Amendments to rail transportation policy

The Consumer Rail Equity Act expands one of the fifteen national goals to be achieved in the implementation of the Staggers Rail Act of 1980, to provide that the Commission must consider the competitive positions of domestically produced coal and other commodities. This legislation also clarifies another of the national goals to ensure that rates must be reasonable even if a railroad is revenue inadequate.

Section 6—Inflation based rate adjustments

The Rail Cost Adjustment Factor that is used by the Commission today does not reflect cost and productivity gains, but reflects only increases in the prices paid by the railroads for goods and services. The index operates to increase tariff rates when the index increases, but does not operate to decrease tariff rates when the index decreases. This legislation will require the index to reflect cost, increases in actual costs, not just prices, and productivity gains and will adjust tariff rates down when the index declines as well as up when the index increases.

Section 7—Standards and procedures for determining revenue adequacy

A critical goal of both the Railroad Revitalization and Regulatory Reform Act of 1976 and the Staggers Rail Act of 1980 was the attainment, by our nation's railroads, of "revenue adequacy." Section 10704 thus directs the Interstate Commerce Commission to determine regularly which carriers are receiving adequate revenues, that is, revenues that are sufficient "under honest, economical, and efficient management," to recover operating expenses, including depreciation and the replacement of obsolete assets, together with a "reasonable and economic profit or return (or both) on capital employed in the business."

The administrative standard now used to determine whether a railroad is revenue adequate—the current cost of capital measured against the railroad's investment base—does not realistically measure the true financial condition of a railroad, and tends to materially understate the "adequacy" of the railroad's revenues. The perhaps inevitable result is that the Commission currently finds all major railroads to be revenue inadequate, including some railroads which by other, more realistic measures and by the recent acquisition history of their holding companies appear to be financially secure. This is a matter of substantial concern to captive shippers since a judgment of the Congress in the Staggers Act was that a railroad's captive traffic must make the total contribution to the attainment of revenue adequacy that a railroad's competitive traffic cannot realistically make.

Accordingly, this section of the bill seeks to assure that revenue adequacy determinations are based upon realistic measurements of a railroad's financial health. This very well may be the most important element in the Consumer Rail Equity Act because this analysis will determine the extra burden that must be carried by captive shippers. This is accomplished by requiring the Commission to use the same kind of analysis used by public service commissions in regulating investor-owned utilities.

In making revenue adequacy determinations and applying them in administrating the law, the Commission shall identify revenues, expenses and the investment base reasonably related to providing rail service, and place railroads on the same footing as any other industry by valuing assets at original cost reduced by straight line depreciation. In determining the cost of capital, the Commission shall use actual or embedded cost of debt (rather than the present practice of using current cost of debt, which gives a railroad a windfall for all of its debt for which it is paying less than the current rate) and reasonable estimates of the cost of equity, based on the kinds of measurements applied by public service commissions.

The revenue adequacy determination is to be made annually and shall allow for adequate public comment on the nonproprietary information submitted by the railroads.

The first two Long-Cannon factors are to be applied in making revenue adequacy determinations. If a railroad is pricing an excess of its traffic inefficiently, the revenue shortfall attributable to that practice should not be considered in deciding whether the carrier is otherwise revenue adequate.

These broader inquiries do not dictate any particular outcome, but they should assist in producing more complete assessments of revenue adequacy.

Section 8—Exemptive authority

The Commission is directed in 49 USC § 10505 to pursue exemptions from regulation where the regulation is not necessary to carry out the transportation policy set out in section 10101a and is either (a) of limited scope or (b) no longer needed to protect shippers from abuse of railroad market power. This section would provide that an exemption "may" be issued if the Commission finds there is no market dominance (within the meaning of section 10709, as amended by section 3 of the bill) over the transportation involved in the exemption. This section also provides that the Commission should consider whether persons other than shippers (including receivers and consumers) require protection from abuse of railroad market power sufficiently to deny issuance of an exemption.

These changes are intended to prevent the use of the exemption power in circumstances where competitive forces do not exist to discipline railroad monopoly power effectively.

Section 9—Enhancement of competition

A sound national rail transportation system involves a great amount of interdependence among carriers. The majority of rail freight shipments travel over the lines of at least two carriers, and thus require some interchange of switching arrangement between the participating carriers. The carriers also have a variety of methods of quoting one single rate—called a joint rate, with individual rates for each carrier's share of the movement.

In many major metropolitan areas or terminal areas, two (or more) carriers with long haul lines into the area can serve shippers on each other's lines if they agree to allow one another access to each other's lines in the area or if one carrier otherwise agrees to act as a switching agent for the other carrier. Thus, the carriers can enter into a reciprocal switching agreement, allowing mutual access to each other's shippers, or a terminal facilities agreement, where the carriers are permitted to operate on other carriers' lines to reach shippers located throughout the terminal area.

The widest possible use of these various inter-railroad practices is essential to providing shippers and receivers with competitive alternatives and is essential to the maintenance of efficiency. Current law contains several provisions to assure that rail carriers do not cancel or refuse to enter into these arrangements for anticompetitive reasons. This section of the Consumer Rail Equity Act would strengthen these provisions.

This section would amend 49 USC 10705 to provide that, on request of a connecting railroad or a shipper or receiver, a railroad shall quote a competitive joint rate or proportional rate if interchange of the traffic is practicable. The quoted rate will be deemed conclusively to meet the "competitive" standard of the carrier's revenue to variable cost ratio for the quoted rate is no greater than the ratio for the carrier's existing joint rate or single line rate. Neither the intention nor the effect will be to force any carrier to carry traffic at non-compensatory rates, because section 10705a permits a carrier to unilaterally cancel or surcharge any non-compensatory joint rate. Rather, the intent and effect will be to assure that carriers do not use pricing techniques such as cancelling a joint rate or refusing to quote a joint rate to close off a competitive alternative to the shipper or receiver.

This section would also modify existing law regarding reciprocal switching and use of terminal facilities. The Commission's current discretion to order such arrangements is changed to a mandatory direction that the Commission shall order such arrangements when it finds they would be either practicable and in the public interest, or necessary to provide competitive rail service. The effect on competition should be salutary, giving a shipper or receiver in a major metropolitan or terminal area the option of choosing between two or more carriers providing line haul service.

Section 10—Abandonment procedure

A railroad line (or other facility) that is proposed to be abandoned is typically a line that is of little interest to the abandoning carrier, perhaps because the line is not profitable. However, the facility to be abandoned is often of great importance to the shippers and communities served by the line. Because the impact on a community and its economy can be devastating, an abandonment decision deserves the most careful consideration.

The changes in this section make no change in substantive law. The railroad must continue to carry the burden of proving that the line to be abandoned in (1) uneconomic and (2) that the abandonment is in the public interest. This section is intended to give the Interstate Commerce Commission the most accurate record on which to base its abandonment decision, consistent with the obvious need to permit railroads to discontinue service expeditiously on truly money-losing facilities that lack commitment from the affected communities.

Three procedural changes are made. First, in order to clarify the abandonment proceedings are not to be instruments in a war of attrition, a railroad must wait one year after denial of an abandonment application before refiling to abandon the same facility, unless it can show that circumstances have materially changed since the unsuccessful application was denied. Second, if the abandonment is contested, the Commission must allow a hearing on the impact of the proposed abandonment on community or rural development (the standard set by current law) in one or more of the communities affected. The Commission may contract with outside parties to preside at the hearing, and the railroad proposing the abandonment must pay the expenses of the hearing. Third, the financial data used in deciding whether to permit the abandonment must be based on the revenues from and cost of operating the facility at issue, rather than system-wide or industry-wide averages.

Section 11—State authority

This section will streamline procedures respecting State jurisdiction over intrastate rail transportation. The fundamental goal of present law is unchanged: a state commission exercising regulatory jurisdiction over intrastate rail transportation pursuant to state law must do so consistently with the provisions of federal law governing interstate rail transportation. This section would simplify the achievement of this goal by eliminating the time-consuming process of Interstate Commerce Commission certification that a state's law, rules and practice are consistent with the federal law. Instead, this section eliminates bureaucratic delays and protects the dignity of the state process by relying upon ICC review of state decisions to assure uniformity of implementation. The ICC's review is limited to an appellate function analogous to that of a court reviewing an administrative agency decision under the Administrative Procedure Act, including a provision for remand of any inconsistent decision to the state agency. The ICC is given 120 days to dispose of any appeal from a state agency decision, thus assuring prompt and effective review.

Section 12—Transitional provisions

This section addresses one transitional issue. Section 229 of the Staggers Rail Act provides that any rate not challenged within 180 days after enactment of the Act, or any rate so challenged and found by the Commission to be either reasonable or not subject to market dominance, would be deemed forever lawful and not subject to challenge. Over 800 so-called "Section 229" challenges were filed, very few if any of them successfully, and some rates were not challenged because they were covered by a contract entered into or in effect during the 180 day period. This section will not affect any railroad contract covering the tariff in question. However, many of these contracts are expiring and, under present law, many of these tariffs would become operative again. Any rate not challenged under section 229 because of a contract can be reviewed under this bill's standards. The contract itself and the rates under the contract are to remain in full force and effect; only the underlying rate which will apply on expiration of the contract is subject to challenge.

[From the New York Times, Dec. 23, 1985]

NEXT STEPS IN RAIL DEREGULATION

When Congress relaxed price controls for freight railroads in 1980, it sought an artful balance. It wanted to give railroads incentives to rebuild their collapsing systems. But it wanted also to protect shippers from being gouged by rail monopolies. Some of these shippers now complain that the balance has tilted in favor of railroads, and they make a good case. If deregulation is to work for everyone, the reforms of 1980 need fine tuning.

Most cargo shipping is vigorously competitive. In setting prices, truckers and airlines must keep a close eye on the competition. Railroads, too, are held in check for some products in some regions. If they try to overcharge the large manufacturers of high-value products like machinery or auto parts, they risk losing the business to another railroad or an enterprising trucker.

But railroads exert great market power in carrying bulk commodities on underserved routes. So Congress put some limits on the railroads' freedom to set their own rates. Where a shipper can show that a rail company dominates a transporation market, the Interstate Commerce Commission is empowered to intervene. And if the commission finds a railroad's total revenues to be adequate and its prices unreasonable, the shipper can be granted rate relief.

By and large, this partial deregulation has worked well. Railroads are posting good profits. More important, they are investing billions to modernize their systems. And many shippers are getting better service for the same old rates. But some shippers, notably power companies buying coal from Western mines, have been seriously overcharged. And the I.C.C. has so far denied them relief. The commission, it appears, clings to the outdated rationale that the railroads need every last penny to stay in business.

A coalition of commodity shippers, electric utilities, labor unions and consumer groups urges legislation, to reduce the I.C.C.'s discretion, forcing it to come down harder on strong railroads. Things may have to come to that if the commission refuses to tighten its guidelines for rate relief. But the dreary history of price regulation makes very clear that prices set by regulators can never be entirely fair or efficient.

The long-term goal of reform should be to keep easing off regulation by making the shipping industry ever more competititive. At least three steps could be taken toward that end:

Congress should authorize construction of pipelines to carry mixtures of pulverized coal and water from mines to power plants. Such coal slurry pipelines have been blocked at state level by railroad lobbying. If Congress pre-empts authority over pipelines, the mere threat of their construction would discourage rail overcharges.

The I.C.C. or Congress, if necessary, should halt rail mergers that reduce the number of carriers serving shippers of bulk commodities.

Congress should explore ways to stimulate more competition among existing rail systems. For example, it might require rail companies to lease their tracks and terminals to competitors at reasonable rates.

The first goal of rail deregulation—a more productive, financially stable system—has been achieved. The next goal should be insuring that railroads share the benefits with consumers.

Mr. RAHALL. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to join my colleagues in the introduction of legislation to amend the Staggers Rail Act of 1980. This bill represents an effort to insure that railroad rates on commodities which are captive to a single carrier—that is, which enjoy no alternative means of transportation other than one railroad—are afforded the protections originally bestowed upon them by the Congress in the 1980 statute.

With this legislation, we are seeking to provide the Interstate Commerce Commission with policies which it cannot misinterpret and that will govern railroad rates on captive shippers thereby maintaining these rates at reasonable levels.

The bill being introduced today is a revised version of H.R. 1190, the "Consumer Rail Equity Act," which we introduced during February of 1985 and is premised upon legislation which I sponsored during the 98th Congress. This revised bill represents an effort among several of its sponsors to reflect recent rulings made by the ICC in the areas of market dominance determinations and the final Coal Rate Guidelines Nationwide.

I must state, however, that I do not fully agree with all of the changes incorporated into this new bill and reserve my right to continue working toward the favorable consideration of several amendments which I find to be of particular interest to coal shippers, especially those coal movements from my State of West Virginia.

Mr. Speaker, today a barrier exists between coal producers and their markets, both domestic and foreign. A barrier exists which contributes to higher rates on consumers of coal-generated electricity, increased unemployment in the Nation's coalfields and the promotion of monopolistic pricing and transportation practices. A barrier exists which is causing U.S. coal exporters to lose their share of the international coal market. A barrier exists which is giving rise to the infiltration of foreign coal into the continental United States.

That barrier, Mr. Speaker, is the refusal of America's major railroads to provide competitive rates and services to the coal industry. Regardless of how competitive coal is at the minemouth and notwithstanding the great strides in industry productivity, the high cost of domestic railroad transportation and the market monopolies most of them enjoy are causing the delivered price of coal to be excessive and unreasonable when given the actual cost of providing the transportation service.

In the Staggers Rail Act of 1980, a piece of legislation in which I was intimately involved, the Congress sought to provide suitable protections to shippers where the railroads held market dominance. In situations such as this, the ICC would examine railroad rates to determine their reasonableness. Instead, after more than 5 years experience with the Commission's implementation of this law, we have found a wholesale abdication of this responsibility among the ICC Commissioners which has given rise to a situation faced by shippers today where no rate no matter how excessive will be found by the ICC to be unreasonable.

The bill we are introducing today does not seek reregulation of the railroad industry. It does strive to eliminate much of the discretion the ICC currently has in formulating market dominance and maximum rate reasonableness policies, among other areas.

As such, this bill represents a midcourse adjustment grounded upon the experience of shippers in dealing with the ICC over these last few years. The legislation incorporates the balance struck in the Staggers Act between the financial interests of the railroads and the monopoly situation faced by captive shippers. It does not harm to the original concept of the Staggers Rail Act of 1980 and its predecessor, the "4R" Act of 1977.

Above all else, this legislation seeks to provide a policy governing maximum rate reasonableness in market dominant situations based on realistic and widely held concepts and considerations. For example, one of the most important matters in this procedure is whether a railroad is earning adequate revenues. A determination by the ICC that a railroad is revenue inadequate under Commission policy effectively prohibits any finding that a rate is unreasonable. And in fact, the ICC today has determined that no major railroad is revenue adequate. Under these circumstances, no rate can be found unreasonable no matter how excessive it is and despite the actual cost of the service provided.

This policy is not reflective of real world situations in the railroad industry. These very same railroads, which are revenue inadequate according to the ICC, are nontheless healthy enough to diversify into other industries. They have the cash and ability to purchase natural resource companies, barge lines and other railroads. In fact, the Norfolk Southern Co., which is sitting on more than $1 billion in cash and which has been chosen by the Secretary of Transportation as a "deep pocket" buyer of Conrail, is, in the view of the ICC, revenue inadequate.

Mr. Speaker, it is time we bring equity to the manner in which market dominant movements and the rates imposed on such movements are determined. It is time we correct the deficiencies of the ICC's interpretation and implementation of the Staggers Rail Act of 1980. It is time we strike a blow for fairness and competition. These are the ideals contained in the legislation we introduce today.

Mr. TAUKE. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to offer my strong support for a bill being introduced today that would permit a "mid-course adjustment" to the implementation of the Staggers Rail Act of 1980.

While the Staggers Act has achieved many of its goals and dramatically improved the financial condition of the railroad industry, it clearly has not worked as anticipated in some important respects. Specifically, the Staggers Rail Act, as implemented by the Interstate Commerce Commission [ICC], has not assured reasonable rates in rail transportation where there is an absence of effective competition. Thus, the protection afforded the "captive shipper" by the Staggers Act has not worked as Congress intended.

In an effort to address those concerns, our colleague, BILLY TAUZIN, introduced the Consumer Rail Equity Act, H.R. 1190, early in 1985. Although I was sympathetic to the cause, I could not support the bill. However, after much discussion, Congressman TAUZIN has agreed to make several important changes in this legislation.

As a result of these changes, I have joined Congressman TAUZIN as a cosponsor of a new bill which is being introduced today. This simplified revision continues to embrace the balance between diverse railroad, shipper, and consumer interests that is embodied in the Staggers Act. Competitive market forces will continue to govern the costs and terms of freight service wherever effective competition exists, however, at the same time, this bill will afford captive shippers reasonable protection from abuses in market power by railroads enjoying monopolistic conditions. In short, it reaffirms the original intentions of Congress as contained in the Staggers Act.

I encourage you to give this issue and the revised Consumer Rail Equity Act your closest attention with a view toward joining us as a cosponsor of this important legislation.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 3 o'clock and 10 minutes p.m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, February 3, 1986, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

2613. Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, a letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a review of the reports submitted by the Directors of the Office of Management and Budget and the Congressional Budget Office, pursuant to Public Law 99-177, section 251(f) (H. Doc. No. 99-155), was taken from the Speaker's table and referred jointly, to the Committee on Government Operations and Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. GAYDOS: Committee on House Administration. House Resolution 368. Resolution providing amounts from the contingent fund of the House for the expenses of investigations, and studies by standing and select committees of the House in the 2d session of the 99th Congress. (Rept. 99-467). Referred to the House Calendar.

Mr. DINGELL: Committee on Energy and Commerce. H.R. 3777. A bill to give the Nation's performance in international trade appropriately greater importance in the formulation of Government policy, to modernize the remedies available to U.S. producers regarding unfair and injurious foreign trade practices, and for other purposes; with amendments (Rept. 99-468 Pt. 1). Ordered to be printed.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 5 of rule X and clause 4 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. WORTLEY (for himself, Mr. COYNE, Mr. HANSEN, Mr. JENKINS, Mr. PURSELL, Mr. SPENCE, and Mr. WHITEHURST):

H.R. 4082. A bill to amend the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 to require legislative branch employees who are cleared for access to classified information to file an annual financial disclosure statement; to the Committee on Rules.

By Mr. HOWARD (for himself, Mr. CLINGER, Mr. LIPINSKI, Mr. FLORIO, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. GOODLING, Mr. BARNES, Mr. PORTER, Mr. LANTOS, Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois, and Mr. PARRIS):

H.R. 4083. A bill to amend section 158 of title 23, United States Code, to make permanent the penalty for failure to comply with the national minimum drinking age, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

By Mr. DE LA GARZA (for himself, Mr. MADIGAN, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. MARLENEE, Mr. ROBERTS, and Mr. EMERSON):

H.R. 4084. A bill to make technical corrections in the provisions of law for commodity and related programs under the Food Security Act of 1985; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. McEWEN (for himself, Mr. CONYERS, and Mr. VISCLOSKY):

H.R. 4085. A bill to create a fiscal safety net program for needy communities; to the Committee on Government Operations.

By Mrs. BOXER (for herself, Mr. LEVINE of California, Mr. DENNY SMITH, Mr. NEAL, Mr. RIDGE, Mr. PORTER, and Mr. EVANS of Illinois):

H.R. 4086. A bill to establish an alternative procedure for the review of bid protests under the Competition in Contracting Act, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Government Operations.

By Mr. GREGG (for himself, Mr. AKAKA, Mr. CONTE, Mr. JONES of North Carolina, Mr. HOYER, Mr. TALLON, Mr. GILMAN, Mr. SMITH of New Hampshire, Ms. OAKAR, Mr. ANNUNZIO, Mr. MINETA, Mr. WRIGHT, Mr. WALKER, and Mr. FUQUA):

H.R. 4087. A bill authorizing the President to present gold medals to the families of the crew members of mission 51-L of the space shuttle Challenger; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. HENDON (for himself, Mr. COBEY, Mr. WHITLEY, Mr. VALENTINE, Mr. DANIEL, Mr. SWINDALL, Mr. ROWLAND of Georgia, Mr. JENKINS, and Mr. SLAUGHTER):

H.R. 4088. A bill to amend the Nuclear Waste Policy Act of 1982 to prohibit the development of a repository in proximity to a monitored retrievable storage facility; jointly, to the Committees on Energy and Commerce and Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. LEHMAN of California:

H.R. 4089. A bill to prohibit the construction of dams within national parks and monuments; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. LEWIS of Florida:

H.R. 4090. A bill to establish the Big Cypress National Preserve Addition in the State of Florida, and other purposes; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. LOTT:

H.R. 4091. A bill to amend the Wild and Scenic Rivers Act by designating a segment of the Black Creek in Mississippi as a component of the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

By Mr. McKINNEY (for himself, Mr. MORRISON of Connecticut, Mrs. JOHNSON, Mr. ROWLAND of Connecticut, Mrs. KENNELLY, and Mr. GEJDENSON):

H.R. 4092. A bill to amend title 28, United States Code, to provide for the appointment of one additional district judge for the District of Connecticut; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MICA (for himself, Mr. MACKAY, Mr. SMITH, of Florida, and Mr. THOMAS of Georgia):

H.R. 4093. A bill to promote economic growth and trade expansion, to amend the Trade Act of 1974 to open foreign markets, to enhance the competitiveness of U.S. firms, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on Ways and Means; Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs; Foreign Affairs; Agriculture; the Judiciary; and Energy and Commerce.

REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

In compliance with Public Law 601, 79th Congress, title III, Regulation of Lobbying Act, section 308(b), which provides as follows:

(b) All information required to be filed under the provisions of this section with the Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate shall be compiled by said Clerk and Secretary, acting jointly, as soon as practicable after the close of the calendar quarter with respect to which such information is filed and shall be printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

The Clerk of the House of Representatives and the Secretary of the Senate jointly submit their report of the compilation required by said law and have included all registrations and quarterly reports received.

REGISTRATIONS

The following registrations were submitted for the fourth calendar quarter 1985:

(NOTE.—The form used for report is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

This page (page 1) is designed to supply identifying data; and page 2 (on the back of this page) deals with financial data.

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

"QUARTERLY" REPORT: To indicate which one of the four calendar quarters is covered by this Report, place an "X" below the appropriate figure. Fill out both page 1 and page 2 and as many additional pages as may be required. The first additional page should be numbered as page "3," and the rest of such pages should be "4," "5," "6," etc. Preparation and filing in accordance with instructions will accomplish compliance with all quarterly reporting requirements of the Act.

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

QUARTERLY REPORTS*

*All alphanumeric characters and monetary amounts refer to receipts and expenditures on page 2, paragraphs D and E of the Quarterly Report Form.

The following quarterly reports were submitted for the fourth calendar quarter 1985:

(NOTE.—The form used for reporting is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

This page (page 1) is designed to supply identifying data; and page 2 (on the back of this page) deals with financial data.

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

"QUARTERLY" REPORT: To indicate which one of the four calendar quarters is covered by this Report, place an "X" below the appropriate figure. Fill out both page 1 and page 2 and as many additional pages as may be required. The first additional page should be numbered as page "3," and the rest of such pages should be "4," "5," "6," etc. Preparation and filing in accordance with instructions will accomplish compliance with all quarterly reporting requirements of the Act.

Year: 19.....

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:
1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§ 302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, ☐ place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports.

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

PAGE 1

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

D. RECEIPTS (INCLUDING CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS):

Fill in every blank. If the answer to any numbered item is "None," write "None" in the space following the number.

Receipts (other than loans)

1. $.....Dues and assessments
2. $.....Gifts of money or anything of value
3. $.....Printed or duplicated matter received as a gift
4. $.....Receipts from sale of printed or duplicated matter
5. $.....Received for services (e.g., salary, fee, etc.)
6. $.....TOTAL for this Quarter (Add items "1" through "5")
7. $.....Received during previous Quarters of calendar year
8. $.....TOTAL from Jan. 1 through this Quarter (Add "6" and "7")

Loans Received

"The term 'contribution' includes a . . . loan . . ."—Sec. 302(a).

9. $.....TOTAL now owed to others on account of loans
10. $.....Borrowed from others during this Quarter
11. $.....Repaid to others during this Quarter

12. $.....Expense money" and Reimbursements received this Quarter

Contributors of $500 or more

QUARTERLY REPORTS*

*All alphanumeric characters and monetary amounts refer to receipts and expenditures on page 2, paragraphs D and E of the Quarterly Report Form.

The following reports for the third calendar quarter of 1985 were received too late to be included in the published reports for that quarter:

(NOTE.—The form used for report is reproduced below. In the interest of economy in the RECORD, questions are not repeated, only the essential answers are printed, and are indicated by their respective headings.)

FILE ONE COPY WITH THE SECRETARY OF THE SENATE AND FILE TWO COPIES WITH THE CLERK OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES:

This page (page 1) is designed to supply identifying data; and page 2 (on the back of this page) deals with financial data.

PLACE AN "X" BELOW THE APPROPRIATE LETTER OR FIGURE IN THE BOX AT THE RIGHT OF THE "REPORT" HEADING BELOW:

"PRELIMINARY" REPORT ("Registration"): To "register," place an "X" below the letter "P" and fill out page 1 only.

"QUARTERLY" REPORT: To indicate which one of the four calendar quarters is covered by this Report, place an "X" below the appropriate figure. Fill out both page 1 and page 2 and as many additional pages as may be required. The first additional page should be numbered as page "3," and the rest of such pages should be "4," "5," "6," etc. Preparation and filing in accordance with instructions will accomplish compliance with all quarterly reporting requirements of the Act.

Year: 19.....

REPORT

PURSUANT TO FEDERAL REGULATION OF LOBBYING ACT

P	QUARTER
	1st	2d	3d	4th
(Mark one square only)

NOTE ON ITEM "A".—(a) IN GENERAL. This "Report" form may be used by either an organization or an individual, as follows:
(i) "Employee".—To file as an "employee", state (in Item "B") the name, address, and nature of business of the "employer". (If the "employee" is a firm [such as a law firm or public relations firm], partners and salaried staff members of such firm may join in filing a Report as an "employee".)
(ii) "Employer".—To file as an "employer", write "None" in answer to Item "B".
(b) SEPARATE REPORTS. An agent or employee should not attempt to combine his Report with the employer's Report:
(i) Employers subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their agents or employees.
(ii) Employees subject to the Act must file separate Reports and are not relieved of this requirement merely because Reports are filed by their employers.

A. ORGANIZATION OR INDIVIDUAL FILING:

1. State name, address, and nature of business.

2. If this Report is for an Employer, list names of agents or employees who will file Reports for this Quarter.

NOTE ON ITEM "B".—Reports by Agents or Employees. An employee is to file, each quarter, as many Reports as he has employers, except that: (a) If a particular undertaking is jointly financed by a group of employers, the group is to be considered as one employer, but all members of the group are to be named, and the contribution of each member is to be specified; (b) if the work is done in the interest of one person but payment therefor is made by another, a single Report—naming both persons as "employers"—is to be filed each quarter.

B. EMPLOYER.—State name, address, and nature of business. If there is no employer, write "None."

NOTE ON ITEM "C".—(a) The expression "in connection with legislative interests," as used in this Report, means "in connection with attempting, directly or indirectly, to influence the passage or defeat of legislation." "The term 'legislation' means bills, resolutions, amendments, nominations, and other matters pending or proposed in either House of Congress, and includes any other matter which may be the subject of action by either House"—§302(e).
(b) Before undertaking any activities in connection with legislative interests, organizations and individuals subject to the Lobbying Act are required to file a "Preliminary" Report (Registration).
(c) After beginning such activities, they must file a "Quarterly" Report at the end of each calendar quarter in which they have either received or expended anything of value in connection with legislative interests.

C. LEGISLATIVE INTERESTS, AND PUBLICATIONS in connection therewith:

1. State approximately how long legislative interests are to continue. If receipts and expenditures in connection with legislative interests have terminated, place an "X" in the box at the left, so that this Office will no longer expect to receive Reports. ☐

2. State the general legislative interests of the person filing and set forth the specific legislative interests by reciting: (a) Short titles of statutes and bills; (b) House and Senate numbers of bills, where known; (c) citations of statutes, where known; (d) whether for or against such statutes and bills.

3. In the case of those publications which the person filing has caused to be issued or distributed in connection with legislative interests, set forth: (a) Description, (b) quantity distributed; (c) date of distribution, (d) name of printer or publisher (if publications were paid for by person filing) or name of donor (if publications were received as a gift).

(Answer items 1, 2, and 3 in the space below. Attach additional pages if more space is needed)

4. If this is a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) rather than a "Quarterly" Report, state below what the nature and amount of anticipated expenses will be; and if for an agent or employee, state also what the daily, monthly, or annual rate of compensation is to be. If this is a "Quarterly" Report, disregard this item "C4" and fill out items "D" and "E" on the back of this page. Do not attempt to combine a "Preliminary" Report (Registration) with a "Quarterly" Report.

AFFIDAVIT

PAGE 1

NOTE ON ITEM "D."—(a) In General. The term "contribution" includes anything of value. When an organization or individual uses printed or duplicated matter in a campaign attempting to influence legislation, money received by such organization or individual—for such printed or duplicated matter—is a "contribution." "The term 'contribution' includes a gift, subscription, loan, advance, or deposit of money, or anything of value, and includes a contract, promise, or agreement, whether or not legally enforceable, to make a contribution"—Section 302(a) of the Lobbying Act.

(b) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN EMPLOYER.—(i) In General. Item "D" is designed for the reporting of all receipts from which expenditures are made, or will be made, in accordance with legislative interests.

(ii) Receipts of Business Firms and Individuals.—A business firm (or individual) which is subject to the Lobbying Act by reason of expenditures which it makes in attempting to influence legislation—but which has no funds to expend except those which are available in the ordinary course of operating a business not connected in any way with the influencing of legislation—will have no receipts to report, even though it does have expenditures to report.

(iii) Receipts of Multipurpose Organizations.—Some organizations do not receive any funds which are to be expended solely for the purpose of attempting to influence legislation. Such organizations make such expenditures out of a general fund raised by dues, assessments, or other contributions. The percentage of the general fund which is used for such expenditures indicates the percentage of dues, assessments, or other contributions which may be considered to have been paid for that purpose. Therefore, in reporting receipts, such organizations may specify what that percentage is, and report their dues, assessments, and other contributions on that basis. However, each contributor of $500 or more is to be listed, regardless of whether the contribution was made solely for legislative purposes.

(c) IF THIS REPORT IS FOR AN AGENT OR EMPLOYEE.—(i) In General. In the case of many employees, all receipts will come under Items "D 5" (received for services) and "D 12" (expense money and reimbursements). In the absence of a clear statement to the contrary, it will be presumed that your employer is to reimburse you for all expenditures which you make in connection with legislative interests.

(ii) Employer as Contributor of $500 or More.—When your contribution from your employer (in the form of salary, fee, etc.) amounts to $500 or more, it is not necessary to report such contribution under "D 13" and "D 14," since the amount has already been reported under "D 5," and the name of the "employer" has been given under Item "B" on page 1 of this report.

D. RECEIPTS (INCLUDING CONTRIBUTIONS AND LOANS):

Fill in every blank. If the answer to any numbered item is "None," write "None" in the space following the number.

Receipts (other than loans)

1. $.....Dues and assessments
2. $.....Gifts of money or anything of value
3. $.....Printed or duplicated matter received as a gift
4. $.....Receipts from sale of printed or duplicated matter
5. $.....Received for services (e.g., salary, fee, etc.)
6. $.....TOTAL for this Quarter (Add items "1" through "5")
7. $.....Received during previous Quarters of calendar year
8. $.....TOTAL from Jan. 1 through this Quarter (Add "6" and "7")

Loans Received

"The term 'contribution' includes a . . . loan . . ."—Sec. 302(a).

9. $.....TOTAL now owed to others on account of loans
10. $.....Borrowed from others during this Quarter
11. $.....Repaid to others during this Quarter

12. $.....Expense money" and Reimbursements received this Quarter

Contributors of $500 or more (from Jan. 1 through this Quarter)

13. Have there been such contributors?

Please answer "yes" or "no": .....

14. In the case of each contributor whose contributions (including loans) during the "period" from January 1 through the last days of this Quarter total $500 or more:

SENATE—Thursday, January 30, 1986

(Legislative day of Monday, January 27, 1986)

The Senate met at 9:30 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by the President pro tempore [Mr. THURMOND].

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

For what is your life? It is even a vapour that appeareth for a little while, and then vanisheth.—James 4:14.

Gracious God, Lord of life, 46 hours ago, cosmic tragedy galvanized America into one united family as seven valiant pioneers were taken from us. In profound silence, as though life was in suspension, millions watched in unbelief and waited transfixed, hoping against hope. For those unforgettable moments—perhaps hours—we were all one in shock and grief: all races, all ages, the high and mighty, the low and weak—all one in inexpressible agony, with an overwhelming sense of loss.

We thank You for the greatness of the American heart revealed in the strong and tender response of our leadership: the reassuring, healing message of the President, the instinctive resort to prayer of the Congress, the compassionate words of Senators and Representatives, the emerging conviction that the sacrifice of the heroes was not in vain but rather stimulus to national renewal of our commitment to space.

Thank You, Almighty God, for the seven heroes, their families, our leaders, the people of America, and the sensitive coverage by the news media. Praise God for America! Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished majority leader is recognized.

SCHEDULE

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, under the standing order, the leaders have 10 minutes each. Then there is a special order in favor of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE].

There will be routine morning business, not to extend beyond 10 a.m., with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 5 minutes each.

At 10 a.m., the Senate will resume consideration of S. 638, the Conrail bill. Pending is the Dixon amendment No. 1567 to the Danforth amendment No. 1437.

Rollcall votes can be expected throughout the day and can be expected prior to 12 noon. In fact, I assume that there will be a vote around 11 o'clock on the Dixon amendment.

By unanimous consent, at 3 p.m. today, a cloture vote will occur on the Danforth committee substitute to S. 638.

Mr. President, it is my hope that we can conclude action on Conrail today. I know there is some indication that there may be an extended postcloture filibuster if cloture is invoked. Obviously, if cloture is not invoked, there will be another attempt to do that next week. But it is my hope that we can finish the bill today and then go to TV in the Senate next week, followed by the Genocide Convention.

I must indicate that if we have to spend a full week and come back after the recess on Conrail, it will probably displace one or both of those matters. So I hope we can conclude the Conrail bill. We have been on it for a second week. I think everybody understands the issues.

With reference to tomorrow, I think we will be able to say definitely after the cloture vote. Again, it may depend on whether or not we are able to complete action on the bill. I know there are a number of Senators on each side who desire to attend the memorial service in Houston tomorrow, and we hope to be able to accommodate them; but, again, we would like to finish action on this bill.

RECOGNITION OF THE DEMOCRATIC LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The distinguished Democratic leader is recognized.

SENATOR STEVENS RECEIVES MINUTE MAN AWARD

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I should like to call to the attention of my colleagues that last evening, the Reserve Officers Association of the United States, at its 1986 National Council midwinter banquet, presented our distinguished colleague from Alaska [Mr. STEVENS] with the 1986 "Minute Man of the Year" award. This award is presented annually by the ROA to the citizen who has contributed most to national security in these times.

Mr. President, previous recipients of the ROA's annual Minute Man of the Year award include Presidents Ford and Reagan, Senators STENNIS, JACKSON, THURMOND, and NUNN.

Our distinguished colleague and esteemed friend from Alaska deserves our congratulations for this richly deserved recognition as ROA's "Minute Man of the Year."

Senator STEVENS, as a young reserve officer on duty in China during World War II, formed a strong conviction that the best way to prevent another world-wide conflict was to ensure that our Nation would always be ready to defend itself. More recently, Senator STEVENS has exerted strong leadership to this end as chairman of the Defense Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations. His efforts have resulted in increased readiness of our Armed Forces, including substantially increased funding for Guard and Reserve programs.

Mr. President, I again offer my congratulations to the distinguished Defense Subcommittee chairman.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD the introductory remarks of Capt. David L. Woods, USNR, at last evening's presentation of the "Minute Man of the Year" award, along with two letters of congratulation, and a list of previous recipients of ROA's annual "Minute Man of the Year" award.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

REMARKS OF CAPT. DAVID L. WOODS, USNR

Senator STEVENS has had a close association with the military which spans more than four decades, from his World War II service in China as a first lieutenant with Gen. Claire Chennault to his current position as chairman of the Appropriations Defense Subcommittee.

In this latter capacity, he has demonstrated strong advocacy of military readiness from his position of great responsibility.

Without Senator STEVENS' strong leadership, this year's, Department of Defense budget would have failed to provide the readiness our Nation expects and requires.

Of particular interest to ROA has been his concern for the equipping and training of the Reserve components including the National Guard.

Senator STEVENS' strong leadership has insured that essential funding for the Reserve survived the long and arduous House-Senate conference process, and has become law.

We applaud his statesmanship in the Senate, and we are honored to recognize him.

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

One of my most pleasant responsibilities as national president of ROA is to make this presentation.

Will Senator STEVENS please join me for the presentation of our Minute Man of the Year award.

I also want to take this opportunity to read aloud two letters of congratulations from two of your friends.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, DC, January 24, 1986.

DEAR TED: Congratulations on your receipt of the 1986 "Minute Man of the Year" award from the Reserve Officers Association of the United States.

Your strong leadership as Chairman of the Defense Subcommittee of the Senate Committee on Appropriations has resulted in substantially increased funding for Guard and Reserve programs.

Your dedication and long association with a strong National Defense has been evident since your service with the renowned Flying Tigers in World War II.

Again, congratulations on this richly-deserved recognition as ROA's "Minute Man of the Year."

With warmest regards, I am

Sincerely yours,

ROBERT.

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, January 21, 1986.

Hon. TED STEVENS,
U.S. Senate, Washington, DC.

DEAR TED: I am delighted and honored to congratulate you on your selection by the Reserve Officers Association of the United States as the 29th recipient of the "Minute Man of the Year" award.

You receive this well-deserved recognition for your consistent and dedicated commitment to the maintenance of a strong and fully prepared national defense. I take this opportunity to thank you personally for your consistent support in the United States Senate for our initiatives to keep this nation strong and free.

I commend the Reserve Officers Association of the United States for choosing you, and Nancy joins me in again congratulating you. God bless you.

Sincerely,

RONALD REAGAN.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECOGNITION OF SENATOR PROXMIRE

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. PROXMIRE] is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

SHOULD SOVIET CHEATING END ARMS CONTROL?

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the administration released a report just before Christmas charging a series of nuclear weapons treaty violations by the Soviet Union. Those charges should have surprised no one. The administration has made the same charges in generalities for years. Why? First, there have undoubtedly been violations of the treaties by both the Soviet Union and the United States. Some of those alleged violations have been the product of ambiguous language in a treaty. The accuser may construe the production or deployment of a particular missile as a violation because he construes the missile as a new weapon, although the treaty specifically forbade such a deployment. The accused claims it is not a new missile, but simply a follow on of an old missile with minor modifications. The administration also charges that the Soviets have nuclear weapons test explosions in excess of the 150-kiloton limit established by the 1974 treaty. The Russians argue that the difference in geologic formations between the two countries have distorted the interpretation of the volume of the explosion.

The second reason the administration has made these charges should be obvious. Here is an administration headed by a President of the United States who has a record of consistent opposition to every one of the arms control treaties which his administration claims are being violated. Wholesale Russian violations would justify the wisdom of his consistent opposition to the treaties. Here is a President who has not negotiated or come close to negotiating an arms control treaty for the 5 years he has occupied the Presidency. Poll after poll has demonstrated the overwhelming bipartisan support for arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union throughout the country.

What effect on the public attitude toward arms control can we expect from a series of charges by the administration and the President of the United States that the Soviets are violating arms control treaties? Can there be any doubt? The reaction should be simple and clear. As the charges continue, most Americans will believe their President. They will believe that the Soviets are violating the agreements. Why not? After all, we are Americans. We love our country. Sure, the Soviets deny that they have cheated. What do you expect? After all, the Soviets are the adversary. They are Communists.

And now comes, not a charge of a violation here or there, but an official report by the administration specifying a series of particular violations. Is that not likely to jar the confidence of the American public that we can and should enter into arms control treaties with the Soviet Union? Will millions of people not ask: "If the Soviet Union cheats on these agreements, what good are they? They cheat. We do not. So they advance their nuclear power. We do not. So they build up their nuclear arsenal. We fall behind." Result: If the administration chooses not to enter into a nuclear arms control treaty with the Soviet Union, and if it repudiates the ABM Treaty by building and deploying an ABM system with star wars, or SDI, and if it violates the SALT II Treaty under its policy of proportional response, that is matching our allegations of cheating against the Soviet Union with our own deliberate breach of the treaty, should that not win increasing public support as a logical response to protect the country against the cheating Communists?

Mr. President, the answer is that we should put this latest report by the administration, charging Soviet cheating, in perspective. Spurgeon Keeny is a loyal American. He is an expert on arms control. He has served as a Deputy Director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency. He is presently head of the Arms Control Association. Keeny charges that: "The report ignores the fact that, for the most part, the Soviet Union is clearly in compliance with existing agreements." Now, how about that, Mr. President? If the Soviet Union is, for the most part, in compliance, if the violations are about what you might expect in view of the ambiguities in the various arms control treaties, then is the important fact not whether in general the Soviets have complied or not complied?

How can we determine whether these violations put the United States at a serious, significant military disad-vantage or not? Answer: That depends on whether the treaty violations would give the Soviets a significant military advantage. Does the report assess the consequence of these violations on the nuclear deterrent capability of the United States vis-a-vis the Soviet Union? No. Would it do so if the allegations did, in fact, add up to signficant shift in nuclear power? Of course it would. And, in fact, Michael Krepon's criticism of the report makes this especially clear. Who is Krepon? He is a verification specialist. He is also a senior associate of the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace. Krepon points out that the report fails to mention important, militarily significant steps the Soviets have taken to comply with arms control treaties, such as dismantling their SS-11 missile launchers and their bombers in line with treaty requirements.

Mr. President, the alternative to arms control is an unrestricted nuclear arms race. Some Americans, including some Senators and powerful administration figures, believe we can win such an arms race with our superior technology and our far more productive economy. Can we? The answer is a sure and certain "No." Why not? Because no one can win a nuclear arms race. Consider one simple fact. If both the United States and the Soviet Union forgo the ABM treaty and build a missile defense—an SDI—then, for the first time in the 40 years of the nuclear age, the advantage, and possibly the decisive advantage, shifts to the side that initiates a preemptive strike. Why? Because a first strike takes out a large proportion of the other side's offensive missiles and then relies on its protective missile defense to protect enough of its economy so that it would emerge terribly wounded but dominant in a world with only a single superpower.

Yes, indeed; arms control carries risks too. There may be cheating by the Soviets. Our job is to negotiate arms control treaties with the most thorough and comprehensive verification provisions. We must keep that verification alive by giving it every bit of technological support possible. We must take vigorous advantage of the Standing Consultative Commission so that we go to the mat with the Russians on any suspected violations. And we must use the obvious advantage of arms control for both superpowers to let the Russians know that we will renounce the treaty if they fail to comply.

MYTH THAT SAVIMBI IS A PRO-WESTERN DEMOCRAT

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, 2 days ago, when I finished speaking on the floor, another Senator rose and introduced a bill to assist the so-called freedom fighter Jonas Savimbi.

Jonas Savimbi is the man who is always characterized as a charismatic figure, and Jonas Savimbi is the man who is interested in overthrowing the present incumbent pro-Russian Marxist government in Angola.

But there are problems with Mr. Savimbi.

Mr. President, the myth of the day is that Jonas Savimbi is a freedom fighter and pro-Western democrat. This is the myth that many who wish to fund Savimbi's UNITA organization would have us believe. But it is a myth born of ignorance and wishful thinking.

Jonas Savimbi is a dynamic, controversial, charismatic and enigmatic leader. But to call him a democrat or a freedom fighter is a factual error. Here is a man who was trained by the People's Republic of China in the art of guerrilla warfare. He is, by his own words, a Maoist. He is a Socialist. He is a Marxist. He has cited Che Guevara as someone he emulates.

The UNITA organization, which Savimbi heads in Angola, has as one of its organizing principles the concept of nonalignment. It has an uncomfortable emphasis on racial tension—criticizing the central government for its integration of blacks, whites, and mestizos or mixed races. UNITA forces have killed Baptist church workers in Angola.

Any organization that today depends on the support of the South African regime can only be considered opportunistic. And an opportunistic regime can change its colors with each passing month.

Jonas Savimbi has given no indication that if he controlled the Government it would operate on any more democratic principles than the existing Marxist government. My best guess is that the people of the country would trade one form of dictatorship for another.

A freedom fighter? For whose freedom? A democrat? Where is the evidence? Pro-Western? Hardly. Just a Marxist taking advantage of the possibility of obtaining U.S. funding.

Yet the myth that Savimbi is a pro-Eastern democrat is one that many would have us believe.

Mr. President, as this year goes on, we are going to be asked to give millions of dollars, tens of millions of dollars to Savimbi in an attempt to overthrow the incumbent Government of Angola.

I would be happy if Mr. Santos, the pro-Russian dictator in Angola was replaced. The President in November said he favors covert aid to Savimbi to bring that about. This contradicts his previous policy in Angola.

I think we have to keep in mind that the present Marxist Government of Angola, under the Reagan administration, has been supported by the Export-Import Bank of the United States, that Bank, under the guidance of the Reagan White House, has provided over $200 million to a corporation which is 51-percent owned by the Angolan Government. I will shortly be introducing a bill that will make that impossible in the future under this administration. Gulf Oil Co., an American oil company, has paid royalties and taxes to the Angolan Government of $800 million a year, 60 percent of which goes to pay for Russian equipment and the presence of over 30,000 Cuban troops. The present Angolan Government could not stay in power without those Cuban troops.

In a change of heart, this President's State Departments has recently said that the Gulf Oil Co. should consider getting out of Angola. The administration should not be so mild. It ought to kick them out. The President can do that under the International Emergency Economic Powers Act [IEEPA] that we passed here and that he used in Libya. He can force the Gulf Oil Co. to get out of Angola and thereby stop aiding the present Communist regime.

If we want to act effectively to overthrow a Marxist Government in Angola, we can do it not by spending millions and millions of additional dollars in military aid to Savimbi. Rather, the President should just disconnect its economic support system. He can do it.

As I say, the principal support of Santos, the principal support of the present Marxist Government of Angola, comes from an American company paying royalties and taxes to the Angolan Government and from the Export-Import Bank of the Federal Government. That should not continue.

THE OTHER HOLOCAUST: POLAND AND THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, this year marks the 45th anniversary of the beginning of the Nazi extermination policy at their concentration camp at Auschwitz. The persecution of Jews and Gypsies had been going on since 1933 within Germany, but 1941 marked the onset of the subjugation of yet another group: the Poles.

The invasion of Poland in 1939 did not resemble the acts of war later visited upon France, Great Britain, and the United States. That the Nazi war aim in this case was the extermination of the Poles as a national group became evident from the Nazi's particular fury against civilian targets, the effort to dehumanize the Polish people, and finally, the sterilization and extermination of millions of Poles in camps such as Auschwitz.

The Nazi effort to eliminate Poland's intellectual and religious leadership resulted in the systematic destruction of half of its educated classes, almost 3,000 Roman Catholic priests, and almost 70 percent of the Jewish population. Ultimately, this "Other" Holocaust claimed millions of Polish lives, as accepted concepts of decency and morality were reversed as the Nazi's institutionalized lawlessness.

Mr. President, has the impact of these crimes diminished over the span of four decades? Does the horror of the Holocaust occur to us only as a ghastly historical footnote? Mr. President, we live in a world today where violence and terrorism are daily threats to our standards of morality and decency. We can, however, take a major step to ensure that these values remain secure: let us ratify the Genocide Convention. This treaty prohibits the persecution of a group on the basis of its religious, ethnic, national, or racial identity. Why must we ignore warnings from our past, when constant reminders point out the urgency of the commitment to safeguard our future? Let us always remember the sacrifice of the Poles almost half a century ago; let us not forget the importance of the Genocide Convention today.

I yield the floor.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not to extend beyond the hour of 10 a.m. with statements therein limited to 5 minutes each.

A TRIBUTE TO HELEN MURPHY

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, prior to my election to the U.S. Senate, I spent many years engaged in the practice of law and 6 years as a judge. In each of these capacities, I gained an enormous amount of respect for our system of justice and all of its components.

Naturally, we are all familiar with the role played by the judge, whether at the trial or appellate level; we are all familiar with the roles of attorneys, whether prosecutor, plaintiff or defense; we are all also familiar with the role of the jury, a group of people selected from all walks of life to weigh the facts and testimony and evidence brought forth at a trial.

All too frequently, however, another important participant in the judicial process goes unrecognized, or even unnoticed, although their link in the chain which preserves civil liberty and civil peace alike is particularly critical. I speak, Mr. President, of the court reporter, an individual who sits, quietly attentive, throughout the trial, recording for posterity—or for the appellate court, in some cases—the questions, answers, and rulings upon which a trial verdict depends.

Recently, Mr. President, one of the finest, most dedicated court reporters whom I had ever had the privilege of working with retired after 42 years—39 years as reporter for the Lauderdale County Circuit Court, located in Florence, just a few short miles from my home in Tuscumbia, and 3 years prior to that for the law and equity court. During those decades, Helen Murphy always exhibited great ability, tremendous dedication, sincere understanding, and the fastest shorthand I have ever seen.

That last attribute is itself almost unique in today's court system, with the advent and popularization of the more familiar electric machines. When Helen Murphy began her career, shorthand was the best method for transcribing the testimony. As the use of the machines spread, she saw no reason to change the method with which she was already effective and confident.

Although she is slight of stature, Helen Murphy has never shirked from any of her duties. Oftentimes, the language in a trial will suddenly become heated, or a burst of profanity will turn the air blue. Even these words, unfamiliar as they might have been to this genteel southern lady, were recorded accurately.

Helen Murphy has been an outstanding public servant. Her work in the courts of northwest Alabama has made many tremendous contributions of justice. Speaking for all the lawyers who have ever worked with this fine young lady, I congratulate Helen Murphy on her years of dedicated service, and wish her best in her retirement.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an article and an editorial from the Florence Times-Tri-Cities Daily be printed in full in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Tri-Cities Daily, Jan. 5, 1986]

MURPHY'S CAREER

Sitting between a defendant and his constitutional right to a fair trial is not just the judge and a defense attorney. There is also the court reporter, upon whose accuracy, speed and skill a person's life can easily depend.

It is incumbent upon the court reporter to keep a running transcript of a trial. In considering whether a jury's verdict or a court decision is allowed to stand or whether it should be reversed, appellate courts have only one place to turn to review testimony: the trial transcript.

Helen Murphy took her job that seriously for 42 years—as court reporter for the Lauderdale County circuit court 39 years and three years in law and equity court. She said she was "always conscious of the fact that somebody's life, liberty or property may depend solely on my transcription of the proceedings."

Describing herself as "a self-made court reporter," she said she had never listened to a trial before going to work. Shorthand was her specialty. She never adopted the more familiar electric machines.

Most recently, she worked with Judge Leslie Johnson, and before that with Judge Robert M. Hill Sr., now retired. Until 1951 the 11th Circuit also included Colbert and Franklin counties.

Murphy retired effective Jan. 1. She left behind, in boxed shorthand pads pout in storage, decades of local history. But she took with her best wishes and warm thoughts of many friends and associates. Let the record show that hers was a career of devoted and special service.

COURT REPORTER MURPHY RETIRING AFTER 42 YEARS

(By Linda J. Quigley)

FLORENCE.—Helen Murphy is leaving the Lauderdale County Courthouse—but a lot of evidence that she's been there will remain.

Thousands of shorthand pads are boxed, labeled and stored. They are the original records of the trials she's recorded in her job as court reporter for the past 42 years.

Today is Murphy's last day as an official court reporter. She has served in that capacity in circuit court for the last 39 years—for the past nine years working with judge Leslie Johnson and before that with retired judge Robert M. Hill Sr. She worked in law and equity court for three years in the mid 1940s.

When she began her career, she had "never even listened to a trial." Now she has no idea how many she has listened to, recorded in shorthand, and transcribed on a typewriter.

"I'm just a self-made court reporter," she said. After graduating from Larimore Business College, she worked in a law office. During World War II, the court reporter for the old Law and Equity Court in Lauderdale County took a leave of absence to join her husband who was serving in the U.S. Navy.

Murphy filled in, and remained when the other reporter chose not to return.

After three years, she was hired by the circuit court.

Technology has brought machines to court reporting, but Murphy has always relied on shorthand. "Years ago, the closest place they were teaching the machines was in Texas," she said. "By the time the school opened in Gadsden—less than 20 years ago—I couldn't see quitting work for two years to learn a new method. I would have had to try to forget the shorthand, so I just stayed with it."

Many other changes have taken place over the years as well. Until around 1951, the 11th Circuit included not only Lauderdale, but also Colbert and Franklin counties.

Murphy and circuit solicitor W.L. Almon traveled with Judge Hill to the various county seats.

"There were no expense accounts then," she recalled. "We rotated cars to travel to the different courts so one of us wouldn't have all the expense."

Another change has been working in the modern Lauderdale County Courthouse.

She recalled that the old courthouse was not air-conditioned and trial testimony sometimes had to be halted because street noises through the open windows made hearing difficult.

For a court reporter, every word is critical. The transcript of a trial or other legal proceeding is the only testimony considered by the appellate courts in making a final decision to let a lower court ruling be reversed, remanded or allowed to stand.

"I'm always conscious of the fact that somebody's life, liberty or property may depend solely on my transcription of the proceedings," she said. "You're challenged every time you walk into the courtroom to do the very best that you can.

"I guess it's one of the most stressful jobs you can have," she said. "But I love the work and I love the people I work with. We've got some of the best judges and the best bar association anywhere. It's been a good life."

Although she'll no longer be an official court reporter, she's received her papers from the Alabama Supreme Court which make her a supernumerary court reporter.

"At one time that meant that anytime they called you to work, you'd have to come," she said. "But that's not true anymore."

Although she said she'd "miss coming to work, for a while anyway," she has plans to keep busy with cooking, sewing and handwork. "I look forward to spring and working in the yard. And I'm planning to do things when I want to instead of wedging them in between doing the things I have to do."

AMERICA'S SPACE PROGRAM

Mr. BENTSEN. Mr. President, I would like to express my heartfelt sympathy to the families of the courageous crew members of the space shuttle orbiter Challenger. Dick Scobee, Michael Smith, Judith Resnik, Ronald McNair, Ellison Onizuka, Gregory Jarvis and Christa McAuliffe—American men and women whose pioneer spirit of discovery and quest for the advancement of space science will be forever memorialized in the heavens.

My own home State of Texas, has been home for a major part of the space program and for many astronauts and ground control scientists and technicians who have spent many years away from their hometowns to train and work in the Houston area, near the Johnson Space Center. I join the many Texas families who have been and are the neighbors and friends of many of these NASA workers.

Like others who have died in the service of their country, we commend our fellow citizens who in giving to their country have given to us all. Space—the final frontier—reminds us of the vast unknown waiting to be explored. During the last 30 years America has made great strides in space, including landing a man on the Earth's Moon. The U.S. space program has had a remarkably safe record, with the exception of the 1967 accident which took the lives of Virgil Grissom, Edward White, and Rodger Chaffee. I, like all Americans, deeply regret the tragedy of the Challenger, however I remain firmly committed to the development and expansion of America's space program, which I believe is the most fitting tribute to the fine men and women lost in Tuesday's tragic accident.

THE EXPLORATION OF SPACE

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, the tragedy that engulfed the last space flight was something that stunned us, shocked us, and made us realize that undertakings like these are dangerous. What I am going to say does not in any way detract from the sorrow in my heart but I think it should be said. Already, I am hearing on television, reading in the newspapers, does the exploration of space, does the continuation of these flights really mean enough to continue them? Is not this loss so tragic that we should forget all advancements?

I am wondering how these people who are so quickly critical would have reacted had the first attempt by the Wright Brothers to fly an airplane resulted in death, and they were successful in having further explorations stopped? I am wondering what these same critics would have come up with had the first person who ever invented and drove an automobile been killed and their same, rather stupid demands had been met? Would we have had automobiles today?

Every advancement man makes, almost every advancement, is accompanied by tragedy. As much as we all hate and detest war, we have to admit that out of war have come some tremendous advances for mankind. Every step forward in the practice of medicine has resulted in pain or death, yet we have not stopped.

There is possible tragedy prevalent in almost every advancement that man makes, but man has overcome these realizations and gone on to achieve the great spot in history that we now recognize. Could those members of the crew who perished say anything, I am convinced they would have said, in essence, what I have just said.

So, Mr. President, I urge that Americans accept, along with their feeling of tragedy and sorrow, the understanding that progress is not always an easy thing.

THE DEFICIT

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, I am sure that the majority of Members of this body have expressed the desire to reduce the deficit. I think we all agree that the deficit is far too large and must be reduced.

For fiscal year 1985 the deficit set a record of $212 billion, which meant we spent $946.3 billion, and revenues were $734 billion. In 1984 the Federal Government spent $851.8 billion so the 1-year increase between 1984 and 1985 was $94.5 billion or an increase of 11.09 percent for that 1 year alone. Revenues increased from $666.5 billion in 1984 to $734 billion in 1985 for an increase of $67.5 billion for the year or a 10.12-percent increase between 1984 and 1985.

With inflation hovering around 3 percent the last couple of years, I think it is obvious the enormous increase in spending is the real culprit. There is no reason for Federal spending to be increasing at three or four times our annual inflation rate. I believe that most all Members agree that the deficit is a problem, but there is considerable debate as to the solution. I suggest the following:

First, we should enact a constitutional amendment to make us balance the budget. Oklahoma, like 38 other States, has such an amendment which mandates not only that the States balance the budget but also that the politicians must make the difficult decisions to do so.

Second, I also strongly urge Congress to enact the line-item veto. Last year offers a classic example where we passed a continuing resolution that totaled $378 billion alone and had seven appropriations bills thrown together and yet the President only had two options—to sign or to veto the entire package. This is certainly not the balance of power envisioned by our forefathers.

Last year when Congress passed Gramm-Rudman, we stated our shared objective to reduce the deficit over a 5-year period. For fiscal year 1986 we stated our minimum goal to reduce the projected deficit $11.7 billion, and the administration is currently preparing and implementing the sequestration process to begin. I strongly believe that Congress should enact the $11.7 billion in deficit reduction before March 1 of this year and not allow the sequestration process for 1986 to go forward. I believe that is true as well for 1987 through 1991. Congress should make these decisions.

An excellent place to begin in finding savings for 1986 and succeeding years would be to complete work on the stalled budget reconciliation bill, which nearly passed Congress before the Christmas recess. The reconciliation bill would have been able to reduce the deficit by about $75 billion over the next 3 years. While I understand there are a few provisions which are objectionable, such as Superfund, I recommend we drop the most controversial provisions and get as much of the other savings as possible. Countless hours and negotiation went into the reconciliation package and it seems to be ill-advised to let that effort go to waste.

I urge this body not to ignore its fiscal responsibility.

OIL EQUALIZATION TAX

Mr. NICKLES. Mr. President, there is considerable discussion today about the wisdom of the so-called oil import fee. I stated to President Reagan on January 24 that I would hope he would reconsider his opposition to an oil import fee based on the premise that it is not a new tax but more an equalization tax.

We presently have on the books a tax known as the windfall profits tax, which is strictly on domestic production. It is not on oil imports. We are currently politically encouraging imports while discouraging domestic production.

The amount of windfall profits tax collected since passage in 1980 is as follows:

	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984	1985 estimate
Gross	6.9	23.4	18.5	12.2	9.17	6.4
Net	4.3	13.8	9.5	5.7	3.9	3.0

This represents an equivalent tax per barrel as indicated below:

1980	6.65
1981	9.03
1982	6.35
1983	4.25
1984	3.91

It seems to this Senator that if we are going to have an equity in our taxation of the oil industry we should repeal the windfall profits tax, and if that is not a political possibility we should as a minimum place an equal tax on imported oil and eliminate the competitive advantage we have given imported oil.

I also believe that timeliness is important, and given the considerable decline in oil prices, which have fallen by over $10 or about 36 percent since November, there should be little if any negative impact on consumers. The recent decline in oil prices has not been caused by the demise of OPEC but by the calculated strategy of the Saudis to discipline oil exporting companies to enable higher prices in the future.

Therefore, we don't see pure market principles at work but calculated maneuvers by Government entities to increase their control over world market forces. I believe it would be unwise for our Government to sit idly by and allow countless producers and refiners to go bankrupt while the Saudis are tightening the screws on OPEC. As a bare minimum, let us require that they pay at least the same tax that our domestic producers have been forced to pay since 1980. The windfall profits tax has averaged more than $5 per barrel since its passage in 1980.

Last Friday I urged President Reagan to support such an equalization tax, and I urge my colleagues to do the same as well. Senator BOREN has introduced legislation, which I believe would be an excellent starting point, and which I hope my colleagues will be able to support.

AFFIRMATIVE ACTION—MORE THAN GOALS OR QUOTAS

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I recently read an important speech entitled, "Affirmative Action—More Than Goals or Quotas," by the always perceptive Hyman Bookbinder, director of the Washington office of the American Jewish Committee. The speech was delivered in conjunction with the celebration of Rev. Martin Luther King, Jr.'s birthday at the King Memorial Center in Atlanta, GA, on January 15, 1986. It is worthy of consideration by the widest possible audience, and I ask unanimous consent that it be inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

There being no objection, the speech was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SPEECH BY HYMAN BOOKBINDER

Even though we are so pressed for time, I must make this personal statement. Mrs. King, you won't remember this—why should you?—but on October 19, 1983, I was sitting right behind you in that reserved Senate Gallery when final action was being taken on the King Holiday bill. When the vote was announced—78 aye, 22 nay—the President having already indicated he would sign the legislation, we knew that final victory had come. You stood up, embraced members of your family, then your close colleagues sitting near you. Then you turned around and embraced me. That was not a personal embrace, I realized, though I cherish that moment personally. It was your way of saying: "This isn't just my holiday, just my people's holiday, it is also your holiday, it is America's holiday." And that's how I hope all America will indeed think of it.

Now to my assignment here today. Martin Luther King once spoke as eloquently as anyone ever had about what employment opportunities mean for those deprived of such opportunities. He said, "In our society, it is murder, psychologically, to deprive a man of a job or an income. You are in substance saying to that man that he has no right to exist."

In the years since he spoke those words, it is indeed possible to point to some progress. There are Blacks in some industries and professions once closed to them. There are "equal opportunity" employers and agencies trying to improve their employment record. If we point to some progress, however, we have a special obligation to insist that progress simply has not been good enough. Not when last week's official figures tell us that Black unemployment is 2½ times that of white; that Black youth unemployment is over 40 percent; when we know that Black average wages are about 60% of white . . .

Even as we were winning legal battles for fair employment, in the Fifties and Sixties, Dr. King and others were telling us that legal victories alone would not suffice, that "affirmative action" would be required to make a reality of the legal victories. The phrase "affirmative action" started to appear explicitly in presidential speeches and executive orders, in agency regulations, in civil rights advocacy. There has never been an official document which offered a clear and complete definition of the term. But it has come to cover a wide range of special efforts designed to overcome resistance to progress for excluded groups. It has meant improved training and retraining programs, critical review of testing and qualifying systems, changes in recruiting and advertising campaigns, better labor market information—better education and counseling and upgrading arrangements.

There were not always thought of as "affirmative action" programs. But as officials of the President's Task Force on Poverty 20 years ago, Carl Holman, Sargent Shriver, and I did think of programs like Head Start, and Job Corps, and Upward Bound as the most helpful and sophisticated kinds of affirmative action.

In time, affirmative action encompassed systems for setting realistic goals for equal employment—especially for government contractors and public bodies . . . Such numerical criteria served both to measure progress or lack thereof, and also to serve as a prod to quicker progress.

Overall, these programs did do good—though not as much as we'd have liked. There was uneven enforcement and there was stubborn resistance. Cases were brought to the courts—and in some cases the remedies included even the use of quotas to undo the effects of documented, deliberate discrimination. These court-ordered quotas did cause serious, agonizing, acrimonious debates, even among erstwhile allies. The courts have yet to render final judgment on such quotas.

But today's crisis is not over quotas. It is over the attempt by over-zealous ideologues to dismantle the whole system of goals and timetables and thus to weaken affirmative action generally. The civil rights community is as united as it's ever been on defeating this Meese-Reynolds assault on Executive Order 11246. Even as we meet here, the White House is still debating the issue. Mr. Meese last weekend wanted the impression to get around he'd won the battle. I cannot believe it—and neither should you. The President would have to reject the advice he's been getting from 69 Senators and over 200 Congressmen, including the top leadership in both houses and both parties, the advice from the National Association of Manufacturers and other key business institutions, advice from key Cabinet members including Secretary of Labor Brock and Secretary of State Shultz, from the whole range of racial, ethnic, women's and religious groups.

The battle over the Executive Order can still be won. And it must be won.

The unity which had been eroding for about 10 years is now restored. During those 10 years, unfortunately, the civil rights community had been needlessly divided over the quota issue because of the differences which surfaced in connection with several highly publicized court cases—Defunis, Bakke, Weber. Especially disturbing to many of us has been the impact on Black-Jewish relations. The Jewish community, it has been incorrectly asserted, was opposed to affirmative action.

But the present battle over the Executive Order has clarified things. Except in cases of court-ordered remedies following findings of discrimination, no significant elements in the civil rights community have advocated preferential quotas—and the Executive Order specifically prohibits such quotas. Goals-and-timetables are authorized, and with very few exceptions every part of the civil rights community supports them. It rejects the argument that goals and quotas are the same. I can state with assurance that the Jewish community overwhelmingly approves of this consensus. We continue to oppose rigid, inflexible, preferential quotas, but we support with enthusiasm the use of goals.

But I believe that we must go beyond this issue. Preoccupation with the goals/quota issue to the exclusion of the other aspects of affirmative action is a disservice to the goal of equal opportunity. We have lost too much valuable time and engaged in too much acrimony. This confusion and conflict over the proper use of arithmetic standards has kept us from working as hard as we should for the so-called "noncontroversial" aspects of affirmative action.

Let us face up honestly to two equally valid premises:

1. If tomorrow morning, by some inexplicable miracle, every American company or institution were suddenly entirely free of any prejudice and were determined forever to end discrimination, it would still take a long time before our labor force would reflect the mix of our general population. Too many would simply be unprepared for the new opportunities. But equally true:

2. If tomorrow morning, by some inexplicable miracle, every American sub-group—Blacks, Hispanics, women, etc.—had the same range of qualified individuals for the whole range of employment opportunities, it would similarly take a long time before our labor force would reflect the mix of our general population. Too many Americans and American institutions, unfortunately, would still be unprepared to abandon their prejudices and habits.

We must work simultaneously on both of the fronts which these two premises require. The two premises are, of course, related. Discrimination leads to despair and hopelessness, which in turn leads to abandonment of education and training. And this failure to be properly prepared for employment only reinforces the prejudices of those who are resisting progress.

A real, full-fledged affirmative action program will require action on many fronts . . .

It will require special efforts which reflect the realities of current family disarray . . . of the epidemic of teenage pregnancies . . . of the drug culture . . . of the feminization of poverty . . .

It will require a hard look at our present education, training, and retraining programs, both public and private . . .

It will require an evaluation of current recruiting and selection and testing methods . . .

It will require the best possible understanding of developing labor market needs in a high-tech era . . .

It will require a new look at the whole challenge—to see it as more than numerical goals, important as those are. It will require a commitment and an allocation of resources—in both the public and private sectors—to match some of our greatest commitments of the past: the Marshall Plan, the Space program, the fight against cancer and heart disease, the National highway system. Surely, the social and economic integration of all of our Americans is as critical a challenge as any of those earlier challenges . . .

We operate today, of course, in the contest of huge budget deficits and Gramm-Rudman restrictions—but that cannot deter us from speaking the truth as we know it.

For me personally, today's challenge is a depressing deja vu. As we were putting together elements of the war on poverty 20 years ago, I was particularly struck with one statistic: half of all America's poor that year, we learned, had been poor from the day they'd been born. Breaking the cycle of poverty became our challenge.

Today, there is again a fact that we as a nation ignore at our peril. That fact is that every single day there are thousands—yes, thousands—of babies born into family and community situations who are quite likely to be poor and miserable for the rest of their lives. These are the babies—Black and White, but again disproportionately Black—who will never know more than one parent or ever have any working member in their immediate family, who will know only about welfare and food stamps for survival, who will drop out of schools before becoming functionally literate, who will be surrounded by drug and drinking and crime problems.

For these millions of babies born yesterday, today and tomorrow, the affirmative action they require must begin even before they are born. Neither quotas nor goals nor executive orders will be sufficient to make them ready for employment and independence if we do not pay attention now to their inevitable social disabilities.

So the task of affirmative action in employment is tremendous. It cannot be separated from the related tasks in housing, in health, in education, in family and community stability. It means concern for those born today, for those already dropped out of school, for those struggling in menial, minimal jobs, for those displaced by industrial change, and for the older workers not ready for secure retirement.

Our immediate task is to prevent scuttling of present affirmative action requirements. Let's win that one. But let's not ignore the broader challenges of affirmative action across the board. The Jewish community will be there, I can assure you, in a renewed and strengthened effort to make King's dream a reality.

MILITARY REFORM

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, this will be another insertion of an article from the "Air University Review" of September-October 1985. This one, however, should have specific and direct interest to Members of Congress.

It was written by the Honorable DENNY SMITH, who is a Member of the House, and gives very fine background reasoning for the subject of military reform. This is in keeping with my efforts to acquaint my colleagues of the varying points that will cover the introduction of legislation we hope, not later than the first week of February on this subject.

I ask unanimous consent that this article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Air University Review, September-October 1985]

THE ROOTS AND FUTURE OF MODERN-DAY MILITARY REFORM

(By the Honorable Denny Smith)

It was thirty-one years and thousands of flying hours ago that I climbed into an Aeronca Champ on a small dirt strip in Ontario, Oregon, for my first solo flight. It was a moment that I shall always remember, and it was the start of my flying career.

During the past three decades, I have flown scores of military and commercial aircraft, including the T-34, T-28, T-33, F-86L, F-89H, F-89J, F-84F, F-4B, F-4C, and F-4D in the Oregon Air National Guard and on active duty in the U.S. Air Force, as well as 707s for Pan American World Airways. If someone had told me as a young flyer that I would one day give up my flying career to enter the world of politics, I would have told them that they needed a head examination. However, I now find myself a member of the U.S. Congress, currently in my third term.

As a member of Congress from Oregon, I am considered a conservative by every measure on issues ranging from national defense to foreign and fiscal policy. Thus, as a member of the Budget Committee, for example, I am convinced that our federal government has spent far too much for far too many things for far too long. We need to reform our spending habits.

I also am cochairman of an organization in Congress known as the Military Reform Caucus (MRC), a caucus that seems to have received much attention during the recent debate about the defense budget. At last count, there were 133 members in the caucus, a group that includes 26 members of the Senate and 107 members of the House. The caucus is bipartisan and consists of an almost even split of Republicans and Democrats. We hold meetings on a regular basis in the Capitol. Ideologically, our members represent the political spectrum from the very liberal to the very conservative. The MRC was founded in 1980 under the direction and foresight of two Armed Services Committee members in Congress, Senator Gary Hart (D-Colorado) and Congressman William Whitehurst (R-Virginia).

Interestingly enough, the Military Reform Caucus has not and does not wade into the waters of foreign policy or into the swamps of nuclear strategic theory. It is my belief that it never should. While there are certain to be as many descriptions of the goal of the MRC as there are members in the caucus, I believe that every member of the organization would agree that some of our common goals are to generate and implement ideas and incentives that will strengthen our nation's defenses, to reform the military procurement process, and to provide a forum for discussing innovative ideas in military strategy and doctrine.

As the cochairman of the MRC, I believe that each of our legislative reform initiatives should always rest on two basic principles: we want military forces that can win when called upon; and we want the support of the American people for such forces, not for one or two years, but for the long haul—to the year 2000 and beyond. It is our strongly held belief within the caucus that the American people will not support the defense that this country needs unless they are reasonably convinced that they are getting their money's worth from the dollars they spend.

ORIGINS OF TODAY'S REFORM MOVEMENT: FIGHTER AIRCRAFT

I don't believe one can truly pinpoint a time or place in which the "military reform movement," as it is known inside Washington's circles, was born. Ever since the birth of the nation, people of conscience—both in and out of uniform—have bucked the tide as reformers trying to improve military effectiveness or curb gross waste. And ever since the birth of the nation, also, the military bureaucracy has usually responsed by trying to resist change while stifling the reformers. But we now know that any military organization that becomes rigid or stagnant in the face of change dooms itself by its own nature. Successful military forces must be constantly adapting, changing, and "reforming," if they are to remain viable as the uncertain future unfolds. Our organized military forces have been in existence for almost 200 years and have certainly changed and reformed extensively during that period—albeit often too slowly and sometimes at great cost in the form of blood of American soldiers, sailors, and airmen.

But in my mind, there has coalesced in the last twenty years a clearly identifiable, progressive, and innovative movement advocating coherent reform of the "establishment" approach to tactics, strategy, training, and testing and procurement of our weapon systems.

The roots of today's movement can be traced to an informal alliance of former and active-duty fighter pilots of the U.S. Air Force and Navy with civilians in the Office of the Secretary of Defense (OSD), Congress, and the aerospace industry, who, in the 1962-65 period, launched a crusade to correct the growing deficiency in our nation's air-to-air combat capabilities.

The deficiency that these early reformers were addressing resulted from the fact that the USAF/DOD post-World War II leadership had embraced a nuclear-bombing-comes-first philosophy which swept aside most thoughts of air-to-air combat. The U.S. Air Force, even Tactical Air Command (TAC), embraced the nuclear "trip wire" posture in Europe and held little interest in conventional war problems. The nuclear influence on air combat was evidenced by the creation of North American Air Defense Command (NORAD) and Air (Aerospace) Defense Command hierarchies in Colorado Springs and the development of a successful USAF and USN all-weather air defense interceptors to down nuclear bombers that might threaten the continental United States or the fleet at sea. The airplanes, all designated "F" for fighter, included the F-101, F-102, F-106, and F-4. They had some common traits, such as radar missile armament, poor cockpit visibility, poor sustained rate of turn, no gun, very high cost, and very large size.

Consider Table I, which lists the USAF jet tactical fighters introduced by this time and gives their approximate weight, cost, and quantity procured. As the table indicates, our tactical fighter aircraft were approximately doubling in size as each new generation came along. The early fighter reformers also noted that for each new generation, although the top speed and range (at cruise speed) generally increased somewhat, fighter dogfight performance deteriorated significantly.

Despite the Korean War experience, Tactical Air Command moved farther and farther away from traditional fighter missions toward "deep nuclear strike," which, with the big-bang nuclear weapons, was to be performed even in the dark and in poor weather. TAC's effort to compete with Strategic Air Command spawned the single-purpose, deep-strike F-111—the follow-on to the existing TAC nuclear low-altitude bomber, the F-105. Despite the single-purpose nuclear bomber design of the F-111, the Air Force and DOD advertised it as a multipurpose fighter fully capable of air-to-air combat, all-weather interception, conventional bombing, and even close air support.

TABLE I.—USAF JET TACTICAL FIGHTERS (1944–74)

Fighter type	Years of entry into service	Quantity procured	Approximate weight [1]	Unit cost (thousands)
F-80	1944-49	1,435	16,800 lbs	$187
F-84	1945-54	4,008	15,000 lbs (F)	466
F-86	1947-53	5,890	14,500 lbs (E)	299
F-100	1952-58	2,249	30,000 lbs (D)	741
F-105	1954-63	833	38,000 lbs (D)	2500
F-111	1964-74	469	76,000 lbs (A)	10,200

[1] Approximate weights include internal fuel. Alpha characters in parentheses indicate specific fighter models.

But by 1965, the agony of the F-111, billed as our "next air superiority fighter," was clear, and the possibility of employing it effectively as an all-purpose aircraft had turned into a nightmare. The plan for 1200 F-111 fighters was cut back to less than 500. The aircraft's air superiority capability was known to be essentially nonexistent. Almost any fighter in the works would totally dominate the F-111 in air-to-air combat, even though the F-111 was at the time the world's most sophisticated, most complex, and by far the most costly fighter.

I do not want to imply that having a nuclear-strike capability is not justified, but I do want to illustrate the hazard of being less than honest about the purposes and capabilities of a major military program. Most of the influential people in Washington are relatively ignorant about combat aircraft. There are countless other concerns and tasks that they must see to. In any event, most tend to believe that if an airplane has an "F" designation, it must be a fighter, and they derive that "fact" from movies such as The Blue Max and Dawn Patrol. Furthermore, they believe that if they authorize $50 million or more for a fighter, then they must have bought their boys in blue a marvelous air-to-air combat machine.

The early task of the fighter reformers was to straighten out that misconception and get the U.S. Air Force and Navy back into the air combat business. It was far from easy.

Two of the early evangelists for small, agile, uncompromised air-to-air fighters were former USAF/USN combat/test pilot Chuck Myers and former USAF fighter pilot Jay Ray Donahue. With some help from the Lord, they stumbled upon powerful support from the work of Captain John Boyd, tactician and Korean War fighter pilot, and civilian analyst Tom Christie.

Between 1954 and 1960, Boyd had revolutionized the teaching of air-to-air tactics at the USAF Fighter Weapons School and Combat Crew Training Squadrons at Nellis AFB, Nevada—the Tactical Air Command's "doctorate-level" course in fighter tactics. While at Nellis, he conceived, developed, and wrote his famous Aerial Attack Study. (The brilliant new three-dimensional fighter maneuvers and the maneuver/countermaneuver logic developed by Boyd in this study are still the basis for the current fighter tactics of every modern air force in today's world.) After leaving the Fighter Weapons School in 1960 to get an engineering degree under Air Force sponsorship, Boyd moved to a tour at the Air Proving Grounds Center at Eglin AFB, Florida, where he, assisted by mathematician Tom Christie, spent most of his time developing what is now known as the "Energy Maneuverability Theory." As it turned out, this effort not only provided concise, quantitative aircraft maneuverability comparisons as a tool for tactics development but also created a new language for the pilot to use in talking with the aircraft designer. Boyd's work provided the tools needed to explain the character of aircraft maneuvering performance that was required to yield a superior air combat fighter.

Others who became involved in spreading the small, maneuverable fighter gospel included USAF pilots Everest Riccioni and Bob Dilger. By 1965, the early reformers had stirred up enough interest in USAF Headquarters and at TAC that Major General Arthur C. Agan, Jr., Assistant Deputy Chief of Staff for Plans and Operations, convened a special study group, which included several World War II and Korean War veteran fighter aces, to asses the situation. The fighter reformers received strong support from the resulting fighter study, and after an "assist" from the North Vietnamese in the form of MiG-17 attacks on F-105 bomber formations in April 1965, the issue of our air-to-air combat deficiencies was given recognition.

Early in 1966, the "Preliminary Concept for FX" was released by TAC. It was reasonably well oriented to the air-to-air problem but invited additional multipupose capabilities for night and poor weather air-to-ground capability. Shortly thereafter, the Navy (about to escape from the TFX/F-111B commonality net) created an operational requirement for the VFAX, a deep-strike, all-weather interceptor, dual-purpose nightmare of its own. Then entered OSD (DDR&E) with the suggestion that the Air Force and Navy combine their requirements to yield a new common "fighter."

Many from the old TFX/F-111 commonality camp climbed on board and rejuvenated the multipurpose/joint service theology which, until then, had been greatly weakened by the F-111 disaster. The fighter reformers managed to ward off the proponents of commonality, but just barely. Boeing, Lockheed, and North American received USAF contracts to establish a spectrum of designs for the FX. Their work, much influenced by the Aeronautical Systems Division bureaucracy at Wright-Patterson AFB, Ohio, produced a spectrum of mediocrity that was used by the Air Force Systems Command (AFSC) to prepare an FX Concept Formulation Package, which suggested an airplane ranging between 55,000 and 65,000 pounds takeoff weight—essentially as large as the F-111 and almost as unmaneuverable.

In the midst of all this, Boyd was ordered to the Pentagon to bail out the FX design. His pioneering and disciplined tradeoff work carved the FX down to 40,000 pounds while tremendously increasing its accelerating and turning performance. This was the first time that a U.S. fighter design specification had ever been based on any formal maneuvering requirements. The swing wing and two-man crew advocates were defeated. However, because of the airplane's inherent large size, which resulted from the demands for the useless high mach and very large radar (plus a myriad of other "specs" irrelevant to air-to-air combat), it was not practical to win the argument for one engine. The Office of the Secretary of Defense (DDR&E) further degraded the engine by insisting on commonality between the engine of the Air Force FX and that of the Navy VFX (initially called the VFAX). As a result, the Navy's influence raised the temperature, pressure, and by pass ratio of both engines. Although the Navy later abandoned its version of the engine (F401), it managed to leave an indelible mark on the Air Force engine. These commonality compromises contributed significantly to the problems associated with the F100 engine; they also caused serious reductions in the performance of the current F-15 and F-16.

In 1966, partway through the battle over the FX's size and air-to-air performance, Pierre Sprey, an aerospace engineer and analyst with a deep interest in combat history, joined OSD. He was quickly convinced by the logic of John Boyd's approach to fighter tactics and maneuverability and soon became a close collaborator and supporter of Boyd's efforts to increase the dogfight performance of the FX while diminishing its size. Sprey's experience in these early FX tradeoff battles stood him in good stead when, several years later, the Air Force asked him to play a major role in shaping a new, single-purpose, close air support airplane, the AX, which became the A-10.

The F-15 that AFSC produced after Boyd's innovative maneuverability tradeoffs and the associated bloody battles to eliminate specifications and requirements unnecessary to air-to-air combat was, unfortunately, a disappointment to the fighter reformers. The airplane's size was too big, its dogfight performance fell significantly short of what could have been achieved with greater design discipline, and the cost was so high as to preclude achieving an adequate fighter force size. No single group was at fault: OSD (DDR&E) contributed by demanding engine commonality and an oversized, overcomplex radar; TAC and AFSC headquarters added a laundry list of performance-robbing "goodies" and specifications ranging from a maintenance ladder to a combat-irrelevant requirement for mach 2.5 top speed that degraded performance in the combat critical transonic region. Ironically, the production F-15 failed to meet this mach 2.5 specification by a wide margin.

Interestingly enough, it was the disappointment with the final F-15 outcome in 1968 that led the fighter reformers—spearheaded by Boyd, Riccioni, and Sprey—to almost immediately begin the seemingly quixotic task of starting a genuinely "hot," small, and affordable fighter. This quest, with the help of Deputy Secretary of Defense David Packard's support for prototyping, soon turned into the reality of the Light-Weight Fighter Program and the YF-16/YF-17 competitive flyoff (the flyoff being another reformer-engineered idea). Just as the flyoff was taking place, James Schlesinger became Secretary of Defense and, convinced by the fighter reformers' case for a hotter fighter whose affordability would permit sizable increases in force structure, undertook a successful personal campaign to put the F-16 into large-scale production, despite the opposition of sizable portions of the USAF hierarchy.

At this point, let us step back from the details of fifteen years of battles over air-to-air capabilities in the Air Force. Today's military reform movement encompasses much wider aspects of warfare—land, sea, and air—than just air combat. Still, it is of more than passing interest that most of the leading thinkers in military reform today come out of the fighter business, that they coalesced during the sixties battles within the U.S. Air Force over the importance of air-to-air capabilities and the need for a hot, small, single-purpose fighter, and that their first highly visible success was the F-16. Put another way, had the Air Force in 1968 decided on a more austere, higher-performance F-15, there would almost certainly be no F-16 today and, perhaps, no military reform movement.

In my view, the attractive feature of the reform movement that began with these crusades to improve the war-fighting capability of the U.S. Air Force is that the goal was to improve the product of DOD and to extract more from our investment. It was during this time that increased competition, "fly before buy," competitive prototypes, flyoffs, highly lethal air-to-ground cannons, operational testing, and the concept of low-cost/high-effectiveness weapons all became words of the day, due to the efforts of the early reformers.

Today, these are all issues of vital concern to the Military Reform Caucus; and we have already successfully translated some of them into legislation to improve the way DOD does business, particularly in the areas of operational testing, competitive procurement and development, survivability testing, and the introduction of highly effective antitank air-to-ground cannons.

TODAY'S REFORMERS AND THE FUTURE

The reform movement has learned much and changed significantly since the early controversies over dogfighting. It has broadened its interest from shooting down airplanes to all the means required to win wars. The reformers have increased their knowledge of combat experience and combat history substantially. Based on recent combat experience and Boyd's remarkable new syntheses of tactics and strategy, the reform movement has deepened its understanding of war, particularly the most-important "people" side, as opposed to the often-overemphasized "hardware" aspects.

Despite the broadening of interests, the reform thinkers are still fierce advocates of tactical air power. They strongly believe that, given a major strengthening of our current gravely weak close air support assets, tactical air could be extraordinarily effective in determining the outcome of modern land combat. Another theme of continually growing importance in current reform efforts is the focus on the warrior rather than the manager, on leadership and unit cohesion, on innovative tactics and stressful "free-play" training. The emphases are on the "man in the loop" and his skills rather than on the mostly futile yearning to stand off from the battle, and on engaging and solving the problems of combat as they really exist rather than buying our way out with unsuitably complex technology that may ultimately fail in combat. We demand realistic testing of concepts and hardware, testing that ensures that our weapons work amid the chaos of the battlefield, that they work in the hands of typical troops, and that they continue to work even when opposed by the resourceful enemy. Personally, I am also naturally attracted by the reform movement's demonstrated contempt for rigid doctrine, along with the group's willingness to subject its own views to open debate and to change, based on new evidence and better ideas.

On the congressional side of reform, there has been a recent flurry of Military Reform Caucus amendments to the FY86 Defense Authorization Bill. Two of these amendments tell DOD what survivability testing to do, one defines and prohibits unacceptable conflict of interest, and several reflect disenchantment with the procurement track record of DOD and its industrial partners. How do these congressional reform actions relate to the reform movement within the Department of Defense and the services? It is easy to interpret these congressional actions as a lack of faith in the possibility of reform from within the system. On the contrary, I believe that reform without the dedicted participation of courageous people within DOD and the services is impossible.

However, I know that congressional action—particularly legislation that introduces incentives for such things as increases in real combat capabilities, decreases in costs, increases in competition, and more responsible, realistic testing—can go a long way toward creating the conditions that make it possible for dedicated reformers inside the system to achieve useful change. Thus, the Military Reform Caucus will continue to introduce legislation that changes fundamental DOD incentives and behavior until we see evidence that reform has become a self-sustaining process within the Department of Defense.

You may well ask what kind of evidence, what kind of change, would convince us that DOD and the services were well on the road to major improvements in the defense we get for the dollar. A detailed answer might require a book, but I think that I can outline a few litmus tests that would be very strong indicators that real, not cosmetic, reform is taking place.

On the most important front, the "people" front, I would look for:

Increased promotions for tacticians and trainers, as opposed to managers and acquisition types;

Major decreases in personnel turbulence within combat units and more career-long identification of individuals with a unit of some significant size (for example, a regiment, wing, or ship squardon); and

Major increases in training time, particularly in live shooting and in two-sided free-play combat exercises between units.

These three features are obviously far from a complete prescription for DOD personnel reform, but if we saw these three changes instituted, we would certainly know that DOD had abandoned "business as usual" in the people area.

On the ideas/doctrine/missions front, I would look for similarly simple indicators:

A Secretary of Defense initiative to institute constructive bureaucratic competition (i.e., plenty of "overlap and duplication") between the relevant services for every crucial military mission: for example, infantry, close air support naval mining, intertheater lift and rapid deployment, antisubmarine warfare search, air-to-air, etc.

In the Army, a major reduction, say 30 percent or more, in infantry and armor division weight/vehicle count/personnel strength to significantly increase unit agility and deployability; correspondingly, a major increase, perhaps a doubling, in the total number of high-mobility infantry and armor units.
